PREFACE

The plan of the preceding volumes of this edition has been followed in the preparation of the present volumes. It is modified only by the necessity of making the impossible attempt to condense within a certain number of pages a whole literature.

Of the imperfect success which has crowned the labour no one can be so fully aware as the Editor. Nevertheless, the work is given to the public in the trust that it will furnish some facilities to the study of this great poem, and aid in preparing the way for better editions than this.

The First Volume contains The Text, with a collation of the texts of the Quartos and Folios, and of some thirty modern editions, together with Notes and Comments from the Editors whose texts are collated, and, added to these, such verbal and grammatical criticisms from other quarters as seemed to be valuable; in some instances, notes are given that have little or no value, except as hints of the progress or of the madness of Shakespearian criticism.

As a general rule, in the Commentary preference is given to verbal over aesthetic criticism. Whenever editors whose texts are collated have indulged in aesthetic suggestions, these, in the main, have been retained. But in other cases aesthetic criticisms have been reserved for Volume II, except where the notes were of too brief and fragmentary a character to be separated from the context.

This difference in the treatment of verbal and aesthetic criticism is observed solely with reference to the arrangement of the mass of material, not because aesthetic criticism is inferior in value to verbal. Indeed, does not the value of the latter depend in many cases more or less directly upon the former?

There is a disposition abroad to disparage aesthetic criticisms of Shakespeare. An excellent edition of the Poet, now issuing from the press, discards it wholly; the editor, whose opinions are entitled to great respect, regarding it as an impertinence, and stigmatising it generally as 'sign-post criticism.' Unquestionably, there has been much commenting upon Shakespeare, which, ignoring the humblest intelligence in the reader, is flat, stale, and unprofitable, a nuisance and a weariness of the flesh. But shall we ignore the possible existence of a keener insight than our own? Is the gift of reading between the lines, so essential to the appreciation of dramatic literature, universal? Have the generality of us eyes to see what is there written? Who can fail to be enlightened and delighted with such fine criticism (as is given in Volume II, p. 167) of the very first scene of this tragedy, and which the Editor regrets did not come to his notice in time to be inserted in the Commentary, where it vitally belongs? Are we not to listen eagerly and reverently when Coleridge or Goethe talks about Shakespeare? Can we fail to prize the flashes of light (all too few) thrown here and there upon Shakespeare by Charles Lamb, that genius, wasted in the India House, whom, had England known the gift of God, she would have pensioned bountifully and set to recording the thoughts these plays evoked in him, that we might be brought into nearer communion with the great Poet than, with all our laborious verbal criticism, we have yet been able to reach?

To be sure, such commentators as these, and Schlegel, and Hazlitt, and Mrs Jameson, and Christopher North, and Garrick (such acting as his was aesthetic criticism of a high order) are rare, and exception may be made in favour of all master-minds like these. But the present Editor, in full memory of the many weeks and months spent in reading criticisms on Hamlet, fully agrees with a keen and eloquent critic in Blackwood's Magazine (more likely than not, Thomas Campbell) when he says: 'We ask not for a picture of the whole landscape of the soul, nor for a guide who shall point out all its wonders. But we are glad to listen to every one who has travelled through the kingdoms of Shakespeare. Something interesting there must be even in the humblest journal; and we turn with equal pleasure from the converse of those who have climbed over the magnificence 'of the highest mountains there, to the lowlier tales of less ambitious 'pilgrims, who have sat on the green and sunny knoll, beneath the 'whispering tree, and by the music of the gentle rivulet.'

Moreover, the present Editor freely acknowledges the great interest he has taken in witnessing the power of Shakespeare's genius as shown in its stimulating effect upon minds of a high order. In the endeavour to solve the mystery of Hamlet, the human mind, not only in its clear radiance but in the sad twilight of its eclipse, has been subjected to the most searching analysis. This ideal character, Hamlet, has been assumed to be very nature, and if we fail to reach a solution of the problem it presents, the error lies in us and in our analysis; not in Shakespeare. Such have been the revelations of the wisdom and genius of the First of Poets found in the works which attempt to ravel all this matter out, and from which extracts have been made in the second of these volumes, that the present Editor was not long in making up his mind to bear patiently, for the sake of these, the sea of troubles (sign-post criticisms) that he has been compelled to encounter in the prosecution of his work.
To appreciate what is beautiful is one thing; to be informed of what it is that delights us is a different and an added pleasure.
To vary the language of another: 'The worth of [Shakespeare]
'must rise as his grandeurs are comprehended, and our joy in 'his harmony and beauty will be heightenend the more fully he is 'ununderstood.

"I grieve not that ripe knowledge takes away
'The charm that [Shakespeare] to my boyhood bore,
'For with the insight cometh day by day
'A greater bliss than wonder was before.'"

The Editor has availed himself of the liberty to form his own text afforded him by the fact that the texts of all the ancient authoritative editions are virtually printed on the same page. He has followed no other. If his text appears to follow the Cambridge Edition, it is merely because that edition has been used to print from.

It has been his settled principle, as it was that of Dr Johnson:
'that the reading of the ancient books is probably true, and there'fore not to be disturbed for the sake of elegance, perspicuity, or 'mere improvement of the sense. For though much credit is not 'due to the fidelity, nor any to the judgement of the first publishers,
'yet they who had the copy before their eyes were more likely to 'read it right than we who read it only by imagination. . . . . My 'first labour is always to turn the old text on every side, and try if 'there be any interstice through which light can find its way. . . . .
'I have adopted the Roman sentiment, that it is more honourable 'to save a citizen than to kill an enemy, and have been more 'careful to protect than to attack.'

A list of editions collated in the Textual Notes, and an explanation of the abbreviations and symbols there employed will be found at the close of the Appendix.

In the Second Volume is given, first: a Reprint of the Quarto of 1603. This earliest Quarto differs from the rest so materially that a full or intelligible record of its various readings in the form of foot-notes is simply impossible. In a note on 'The Date and the Text' will be found an account of the different theories respecting its origin.

Then follows The Hystorie of Hamblet, the story on which, perhaps, was founded either this tragedy or the lost original drama which Shakespeare afterward changed to its present shape.

After this comes a translation of a curious old German tragedy called Fratricide Punished, or Prince Hamlet of Denmark. An account of it will be found in a short prefatory note.

Then come the English Critics, and a discussion of the one great insoluble mystery of Hamlet's sanity. Without for one moment wishing to assume the responsibility of umpire, the present Editor thinks it no more than right to call attention to one fact which it seems to him should be kept in view on entering upon this discussion—viz. where the testimony of experts is invoked, and their testimony is unanimous, the speculations and opinions of others, laymen and inexpert, cannot be expected to carry much weight. In courts of justice, every day, the testimony of experts is accepted in cases involving liberty or confinement, life or death, and we cannot, it is submitted, be so inconsistent as wholly to rule out that testimony here. If, therefore, we listen to experts at all, we can hardly refuse our assent to their unanimous verdict. Despite all this, the present Editor's opinion, which, after what he has just said, he cannot, as a layman, expect to have any value, and which, in view of the magnitude of the discussion, he would be the last, as an Editor, to set forth at length, is that Hamlet is neither mad, nor pretends to be so. And in view of the fact that he has faithfully read and reported all the arguments on that side, the Editor begs the advocates of the theory of feigned insanity to allow him, out of reciprocal courtesy, to ask how they account for Hamlet's being able, in the flash of time between the vanishing of the Ghost and the coming of Horatio and Marcellus, to form, horror-struck as he was, a plan for the whole conduct of his future life?

Then follow Notes on The Names and Characters, on the Duration of the Action, on Garrick's Version, and on Actors' Interpretations; it is greatly to be regretted that in this last department our accounts of how great actors spoke are so meagre. As CIBBER says of BETTERTON: 'Pity it is that the momentary Beauties flowing from an harmonious Elocution cannot, like those of Poetry, be their own Record: That the animated Graces of the Player can live no longer than the instant Breath and Motion that presents them, 'or at best, can but faintly glimmer through the Memory or imperfect Attestation of a few surviving Spectators. Could how Betterton spoke be as easily known as what he spoke, then might you 'see the Muse of Shakespeare in her Triumph, with all her Beauties, rising into real Life, and charming the Beholder. But, since 'this is so far out of the reach of description, how shall I show 'you Betterton?'

Next comes the German Criticism.

With the rashness of ignorance, the present Editor, in laying out his plan for this edition, proposed to himself to preface it with an essay upon the remarkable literature which this great drama has created in Germany. His idea was to give the views of all the writings on Hamlet which have appeared down to the present time in that country,—of all, that is, which he could procure. But, in the work of preparation for such an essay, after going carefully through what, at a rough and moderate computation, amounts to some two thousand pages and upwards, he finds himself,—no surprising discovery,—quite unequal to the task. The sense of his incompetency is, however, greatly relieved by the one very clear conviction with which he emerged from the metaphysical atmosphere: the proposed essay, could it be written, would utterly defeat a purpose to be kept religiously in view in the preparation of this edition of Hamlet,—namely, compression. It would far exceed in bulk all the rest of the volumes. The Editor therefore must restrict himself to a simple statement of the principles by which he has been guided in the selection of extracts from the German critics.

First: All unfavourable criticism of fellow-critics is excluded as much as possible. Although our German friends are somewhat jealous of their well-deserved reputation as a nation of thinkers, they sometimes seem, individually, very much disposed to grudge one another a share in that distinction. The propriety of the exclusion observed is obvious. To confound Goethe, Schlegel, or Tieck is one thing, to elucidate Shakespeare is another. It is curious to observe how much of Shakespearian criticism,—and this applies to English as well as German,—is devoted to hostile criticism of fellow-critics, living and dead. It is submitted that this it is, and not 'sign-post criticism' alone, which has tended to bring disrepute on this branch of literature. 'I know not,' says Dr Johnson, 'why our editors should with such implacable anger persecute their predecessors. Όν κερδον μη δανουσι, the dead, it is true, can make no resistance, they may be attacked with great security; but, since they can neither feel nor mend, the safety of mauling them seems greater than the pleasure; nor, perhaps, could it much misbecome us to remember, amidst our triumphs over the nonsensical and senseless, that we likewise are men; that debeur morti, and, as 'Swift observed to Burnet, shall soon be among the dead ourselves.'

Second: The selection is confined as closely as possible to one point: the character of Hamlet. It has been hardly possible to observe this rule with absolute strictness. Tieck's theory in regard to Ophelia's relationship to Hamlet bears so intimately upon the character of both, and has made so deep an impression upon the popular mind, as to demand its insertion here.

Lastly: Whatever has been found that is strikingly original, although not of necessity true, has been included among these extracts; such as the wonderful connection which Karff imagines he has discovered between the 'courtier's kibe' and Thor's frozen toe, and Flathe's opinions concerning the family of Polonius. Of course the reader will not suppose where no bracketed exclamation-marks appear, that all these criticisms or commentaries are adopted by the present Editor; and this remark the Editor wishes most emphatically to apply to all the comments and notes, English and German, throughout these volumes. He has an especial aversion to that cheap and easy way of expressing dissent, or, as it most commonly reads, contempt.
He can recall but one instance of its use, and even there it would have been avoided could the structure of the sentence, condensed to save space, have left the paternity of the note unambiguous.
Those who read or study these volumes may be safely trusted to discover for themselves the wisdom or the folly of the critics, and the Editor gladly forgoes the pleasure of displaying how much wiser he is than those whom he cites.

The endeavour, in all honesty, has been to select from every author the passages wherein he appears to most advantage, and wherein also he contributes his best thought to the elucidation of the great tragedy.
At the same time, it must be confessed, there has been a little amusement had, now and then, in citing passages where our admirable friends stumble and fall in the interpretation of words, as when Gerth states that slings (in the 'slings and arrows of outrageous fortune') are the cables with which buoys are attached to sunken anchors or are placed to indicate hidden reefs or shoals.

Notwithstanding these trivial deductions, no one who has made any acquaintance with the labours of Shakespeare students in Germany can fail to be impressed by the excellence they show even in the department of verbal criticism. It is too late a week with Schmidt's Lexicon and a dozen Shakespeare Yearbooks on our shelves to cast any slurs on German Shakespeare criticism. Were such the intention, German criticism could well endure them with equanimity. For the indefatigable labour, the keen analysis, the sympathetic and loving appreciation which characterise the treatment of SHAKESPEARE by German men of letters, command the warmest admiration. Their devotion to this tragedy in particular is impressive. Everywhere throughout the length and breadth of their land commentators on it arise; not only at the prominent centres of culture, but in towns and villages, whose names English-speaking people have perhaps never heard of, do these writers spring up. Even while the Editor is closing his labours, two more volumes on Hamlet have been added to the list. Although it would be a comfort to think that he had collected all, yet,—Rusticus expectat, &c. Verily, given a printing-press on German soil (and the printing-press is indigenous there), and, lo! an essay on Hamlet. Let Germans themselves ridicule this devotion if they will. No man born to the inheritance of the language of SHAKESPEARE can regard it otherwise than with respectful admiration and pride, or fail to welcome the aid which it contributes to an enlightened appreciation of the great Poet. We all hold ourselves partakers of his glory, and such fine adoration of our household divinity we accept as a flattering tribute to ourselves.

And what a tribute is it to SHAKESPEARE's genius! Here, at last, we may venture to set a limit to his imagination. Not even he could have imagined such a fame. No one of mortal mould (save Him 'whose blessed feet were nailed for our advantage to the bitter 'cross') ever trod this earth, commanding such absorbing interest as this Hamlet, this mere creation of a poet's brain. No syllable that he whispers, no word let fall by any one near him, but is caught and pondered as no words ever have been, except of Holy Writ. Upon no throne built by mortal hands has ever 'beat so fierce a light' as upon that airy fabric reared at Elsinore.

In SHAKESPEARE's allusions to Wittenberg the Germans have found a direct intimation that Hamlet was written with especial reference to their own nation; and FREILIGRATH struck a keynote, which found an echo in all hearts, when he exclaimed: 'Germany 'is Hamlet.' LESSING, that most healthy and earnest of German scholars, 'the Englishman born in Germany', was the first, now more than a hundred years ago, to announce to his countrymen the advent of Shakespeare. His masterly criticisms of the Hamburg Theatre, written in the interest of the great English Poet, levelled Voltaire and the French school of taste, and opened the path ten years later for the extraordinary success that attended Brockmann's Hamlet. The enthusiasm which Brockmann inspired in this character was unprecedented in Germany, and can be paralleled only by Mr. Irving's recent success in London. Fine steel engravings appeared, representing different scenes of the tragedy; silver medals were struck in honour of the popular actor, and, what was before unheard of on the Berlin stage, he was called before the curtain after the play.

The enthusiasm for Hamlet, thus kindled, has not died out to this day. Goethe's interpretation, everywhere as widely known as the play itself, quickened the popular admiration by apparently relieving the tragedy of its painful mystery; and although there are not wanting keen critics who dissent from Goethe's interpretation of Hamlet's character, yet as a piece of criticism it filled Lord Macaulay 'with wonder and despair,' and still underlies most of the theories, English and German, that have since appeared.

The last theory of Hamlet's character, which has arrested special attention in Germany by the bold and animated way in which it has been set forth by its chiefest expounder, Werder, was first proposed in strong terms by Klein. It sweeps aside every vestige of Goethe's explanation, with all theories akin to it. It affirms Hamlet to be a man of action, never at a loss, never wavering, taking in at once the position of affairs, adjusting himself thereto with admirable sagacity, and instantly acting with consummate tact as occasions require. A theory so directly opposed to all accepted ideas of Hamlet claims a full exposition. It has been found impossible, in justice, to compress it into a narrower space than it occupies in the Appendix.

The Editor is well aware that he incurs some hazard in thus selecting extracts from the German essayists. If he has unwittingly committed any injustice, and omitted to notice theories for which their authors claim originality, he can only plead innocence of in-attention, and the difficulty he has found in fathoming the precise meaning of metaphysical treatises, dive as deeply as he might into 'the depths of his consciousness.'

German actors and stage-managers have long felt a want unknown in English-speaking lands. There are probably not three theatres in Germany that use the same translation or adaptation of Shakespeare. To meet this want of uniformity, a selection of the dramas was issued by Eduard and Otto Devrient, a name that will ensure everywhere a respectful attention to all suggestions thus endorsed,— suggestions, be it understood, never the crude conceits of the moment, but practically tested during many years of highly-famed practice on the stage. In their rendition of Hamlet by the Messrs Devrient, it is a noteworthy fact that for scenic representation the First Quarto has been proved by them to be more effective than the Second Quarto or Folio, which is the basis of the ordinary acting copies. Over thirty years ago Hunter in England and Rapp in Germany maintained the higher dramatic power of the First Quarto over the Second Quarto in the order of the scenes and in its general effectiveness. But it was reserved for the Messrs Devrient to put these theories to the test with the best possible result, as they say, and as their fame warrants the belief.

The claim for Hamlet's youth, urged by the Messrs Devrient, deserves attention. Hamlet as a youth of nineteen or twenty certainly possesses a charm which can hardly belong to the maturer age of thirty; besides, this idea of him reconciles many discrepancies which have set commentators at variance. It accords with his wish to return to Wittenberg; with the election of his uncle over him as king by the nobles; and it also lessens the age of the Queen and our disgust at the mutiny in a matron's bones. A discussion of this question will be found in the notes on V, i, 153. This puzzle about Hamlet's age arises, to a large extent, it is submitted, from our losing sight of Shakespeare's method of dealing with the dramatic element of time,—a method whereby in the most artful manner he conveys two opposite ideas of its flight: swiftness and slowness; by one series of allusions we receive the impression that the action of the drama is driving ahead in storm, while by another series we are insensibly beguiled into the belief that it extends over days and months. Attention was called to this wondrous art of Shakespeare’s by both Halpin and Christopher North, at about the same time; the former admirably analyzed, with reference to it, the Merchant of Venice, and the latter revealed its working in the case of Macbeth and Othello. If we turn to this present play of Hamlet, we see how throughout, wherever time comes in as an element, we are subject to Shakespeare’s glamour and gramarye. Horatio is introduced to us as one familiar with all the every-day occurrences in Denmark, the gossip of the court, the cause of the post haste and rummage in the land; in the next scene, on the very same day, Hamlet greets him with such surprise that we get the impression that he is fresh from Wittenberg; if we stop to think, we remember that he came to see the old king’s funeral, and that took place nearly two months before, and in that time he might well have learned all the political news; but then he must have been about the court, and it is a little strange that Hamlet had not met him. As spectators of the play, we do not stop to think this out, but accept without question each impression that the poet intends to make on us. Again, Polonius, who assuredly knew the latest item of court gossip, seems as much surprised at Ophelia’s account of Hamlet’s strange behaviour as Ophelia herself; it was evidently a new thing to him, and yet when he goes directly to the King, the latter has been so long cognisant of Hamlet’s ‘transformation’ that he had sent for Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to help him find out its cause; and Polonius, too, speaks of Hamlet’s ‘lunacy’ as a fact well known and of long standing; and the very next day after this Hamlet has a second interview with Ophelia, when she asks him how he does ‘this many a day,’ and tells him that she has remembrances of his which she has longed long to re-deliver. Again, Hamlet tells Rosencrantz and Guildenstern that he has ‘of late foregone all custom of exercises.’ In the last scene Hamlet tells Horatio that he has been in ‘continual practice of late.’ These are not inconsistencies. They are not oversights on the part of Shakespeare. They belong to the two series of times, the one suggestive and illusory, and the other visible and explicitly indicated. Halpin calls them the protractive series and the accelerating series. Christopher North calls them Shakespeare's 'two clocks.' As another instance of the way in which the long time is adroitly insinuated in this Play, note the passage, where Claudius describes to the Queen the events that have followed the death of Polonius: 'the people are muddied, thick, 'and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,' which of course was the work not of an hour nor of a day, but perhaps of weeks; it must have taken some time for this knowledge to have reached the king's ears; then Laertes has 'returned in secret 'from France, feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds.' This, too, consumes time, and the very time which we feel, without stopping to compute it, is necessary for Laertes to gather the populace to his side and mature his plans for rebellion. From what we here learn, Laertes may have returned from France weeks before, and yet when he bursts into the King's presence and demands his father, the short time which is essential for keeping up the tension of the passion comes into play, and we get the impression that Laertes has just landed and has rushed in hot haste to the King's palace. And so vivid is this impression that Laertes is always held up by critics and commentators as an example to Hamlet in the speed with which he sweeps to avenge his father's death; whereas, as we see from this speech of Claudius, Laertes may have been almost as dilatory as Hamlet, and may have allowed 'buzzers' day after day 'to infect his ears,' or kept himself 'in clouds' for weeks. The short time is again thrust upon us by showing us Laertes ignorant of Ophelia's insanity. Apparently, Laertes has not even taken the time to go to his own home after landing from France. And these instances may be multiplied, doubtless, by any attentive reader of the tragedy. Indeed, is not the whole theory of Hamlet's procrastination to a large extent due to this 'legerdemain' of Shakespeare's in the matter of time? There are not wanting critics who, counting off the days on only one of 'Shakespeare's clocks,' conclude the whole action within a week or ten days,—scant room for procrastination, where the killing of a king is the aim. As Christopher North says: 'Shakespeare, in his calmer constructions, shows in a score of ways, weeks, months; that is therefore the true time, or call it the historical time. Hurried himself, and hurrying you, on the torrent of passion, he forgets time; and a false show of time, to the utmost contracted, arises. . . . If any wiseacre should ask, "How do we manage to stand the "known together-proceeding of two times?" the wiseacre is answered, "We don't stand it,—for we know nothing about it. "We are held in a confusion and a delusion about the time." We have effect of both,—distinct knowledge of neither. We have suggestions to our Understanding of extended time,—we have movements of our Will by precipitated time. . . . If you ask me,—which judiciously you may,—what or how much did the Swan of Avon intend and know of all this astonishing leger-demain, when he sang thus astonishingly? Was he, the juggler, juggled by aérial spirits,—as Puck and Ariel? I put my finger to my lip, and nod to him to do the same. . . . A good-natured Juggler has cheated your eyes. You ask him to show you how he did it. He does the trick slowly,—and you see. "Now, "good Conjuror, do it slowly and cheat us." "I can't. I cheat you by doing it quickly. To be cheated, you must not "see what I do; but you must think that you see." When we inspect the Play in our closets, the Juggler does his trick slowly. We sit at the Play, and he does it quick.' Just as Shakespeare has dealt with the time of the whole tragedy he has dealt with the age of Hamlet; in the earlier scenes he is in the very hey-day of primy nature, but the effect of the fearful experience which he undergoes is to quicken and stimulate mightily his powers of thought,—to ripen his intellect prematurely. Therefore at the close, as though to smoothe away any discrepancy between his mind and his years, or between the execution of his task and his years, a chance allusion by the Grave-digger is thrown out, which, if we are quick enough to catch, we can apply to Hamlet's age, and we have before us Hamlet in his full maturity.
In the selection of French Criticisms which follow the German, it may be thought strange that no reference is to be found to Ducis's version of Hamlet,—that unlucky butt for English and German ridicule. No extracts would do it justice, and to insert the whole was impossible. But would it not be well, between our fits of laughter over it, to recall the year in which it first appeared? In 1769 the first German translation of Hamlet was only three years old, and Lessing almost single-handed was in the thick of his battle-royal with the French school of art, then supreme in Germany, and of which Ducis's Hamlet is no unfair representative in the main features; seven years later, Brockmann, the idol of the German stage, played Hamlet at first in Heufeld's version, in which Laertes is omitted and Hamlet is the prosperous successor of Claudius (afterwards, it is true, Brockmann acted Schroeder's version, which is nearer the original, although Hamlet survives the King's attempt to poison him, and the fencing-scene is omitted). And at that time, on the English stage, Garrick and his 'showmen' were 'drawing about' Lear with Nahum Tate's 'hook in the nostrils of the Leviathan.' It is to be apprehended that no German nor English tongue dare wag in rude noise at Ducis, who, after all, did not assume to translate Shakespeare, but merely adapt him. From the French point of view (and is it not unreasonable to demand that a Frenchman should have any other?) it is not difficult to regard Ducis's version as a powerful drama; and we know that in the hands of Talma its effect was signal.

There now remains the agreeable duty to record the names of those from whom I have received aid.

At the very outset, however, it is with sorrow that I am reminded that Professor Allen, upon whom in years past I leaned so heavily, and to whom it was a pleasure to be indebted, has joined the group of

'Precious friends, hid in death's dateless night.'

Had he lived, many an error now lurking in these volumes would have been detected and obliterated. I am reconciled to their presence, since they show how much I have been indebted to him in the past.

My cordial thanks are hereby extended to J. Payne Collier, esq., Mr Albert Cohn, Professor Corson, Joseph Crosby, esq., Rev. F. G. Fleay, Prof. Dr Elze, F. J. Furnivall, esq., Dr Hering, Rev. H. N. Hudson, Dr Kellogg, Dr Ray, W. J. Rolfe, esq., William Lowes Rushton, esq., S. Timmins, esq., Richard Grant White, esq., Justin Winsor, esq., and William Aldis Wright, esq.

My especial acknowledgements are due to Dr C. M. Ingleby for valuable suggestions prompted by his keen, critical taste and varied learning, and for stray notes and readings which might otherwise have escaped my notice; to A. I. Fish, esq., for the valuable contribution he has made to Hamlet literature in the English Part of the Bibliography; and to J. Parker Norris, esq., for his selections in reference to Actors' Interpretations, and for numberless acts of thoughtful kindness; and to Mr L. F. Thomas, the reader of the proofs, the excellent representative of a class to whom authors are under deep though often unacknowledged obligations.

There yet remain three: to my father, Rev. Dr Furness, I am indebted for all the translations from the German (except the Bestrafte Brudermord) in the Second Volume; the mere statement of this debt reveals my utter bankruptcy in adequate expressions of gratitude. More is his due than more than all can pay. Be it remembered, that I alone am responsible for the selection of the extracts.

To my sister, Mrs A. L. Wister, for the fine translation of Freiligrah's Deutschland ist Hamlet.

And to Mrs Furness for the Index in the First Volume and the Table of Contents in the Second.

In conclusion, let me add that I do not flatter myself that this is an enjoyable edition of Shakespeare; I regard it rather as a necessary evil,—so evil that I should sometimes question the propriety of its existence were it not that I am encouraged by the words of Dr Johnson, for whose Preface to his edition of Shakespeare advancing years add only increasing admiration. 'Let 'him,' says Dr Johnson, 'that is yet unacquainted with the powers of Shakespeare, and who desires to feel the greatest pleasure that the drama can give, read every play, from the first scene to the last, with utter negligence of all his commentators. When his fancy is once on the wing, let it not stoop at correction or explanation. When his attention is strongly engaged, let it disdain alike to turn aside to the name of Theobald and of Pope. Let him read on through brightness and obscurity, through integrity and corruption; let him preserve his comprehension of the dialogue and his interest in the fable. And when the pleasures of novelty have ceased, let him attempt exactness and read the commentators.'

Scene I] GILDON (Remarks, &c., 1709, p. 404): This scene, I have been assured, Sh. wrote in a Charnal House, in the midst of the Night. SEYMOUR (p. 138): This whole scene appears unnecessary to the design and conduct of the play, and might with advantage be omitted. The hand of Sh. is visible in it occasionally, but it is part of that undigested plan which is manifest throughout the play. [Seymour finds the same fault in Macbeth and Lear. Ed.]

CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: In this play the Acts and Scenes are marked in the Ff only as far as II, ii, and not at all in the Qq.

1. Who's there] Coleridge (p. 148): That Shakespeare meant to put an effect in the actor's power in these very first words is evident from the impatience expressed by the startled Francisco in the line that follows. A brave man is never so peremptory as when he fears that he is afraid. TSCHISCHWITZ finds a 'psychological motive' in thus representing Bernardo as so forgetful of all military use and wont as to challenge Francisco who is on guard. Evidently Bernardo is afraid to meet the Ghost all alone, and it is because he feels so unmanned that his last words to Francisco are to bid Horatio and Marcellus make haste. [For other instances of irregularities in metre, which may be explained by the custom of placing ejaculations, appellations, &c. out of the regular verse, see ABBOTT, § 512. Ed.]
Fran. Nay, answer me; stand, and unfold yourself.
Ber. Long live the king!
Fran. Bernardo?
Ber. He.
Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.
Ber. Tis now struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.
Fran. For this relief much thanks; 'tis bitter cold,
And I am sick at heart.
Ber. Have you had quiet guard?
Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

2. me] JENNENS: This is the emphatic word. [HANMER printed it in italics. Ed.]
Francisco, as the sentinel on guard, has the right of insisting on the watch-word, which is given in Bernardo's answer.
3. king] MALONE supposed this sentence to have been the watch-word, but PYE
(p. 308) believes that it corresponds to the former usage in France, where, to the common challenge Qui vive? the answer was Vive le Roi, like the modern answer,
'A friend.' And Delius points out that shortly afterwards to the same challenge
Hor. and Mar. give a different response.
6. upon your hour] CLARENDON: An unusual phrase, meaning 'just as your hour is about to strike.' Compare Rich. III: III, ii, 5; IV, ii, 115; Meas. for Meas. IV, 1, 17. As Fran. speaks the clock is heard striking midnight. [See ABOTT, § 191; MQ. III, i, 16; V, iii, 7.]
7. now] DyCK: Is not the sense the same whether we read new or 'now'?
8. much] ABOTT, § 51: Much, more, is frequently used as an ordinary adjective, like the Scotch mickle, and the Early English muchel.
9. heart] HUNTER (ii, 212): As no particular reason appears for the melancholy of this insignificant personage, it is probable that the poet meant by this little artifice to preserve the minds of the spectators for a tragical story. Such a remark at the opening of a play disposed their minds, unconsciously perhaps to themselves, to the solemnity of thought and feeling which suited the awful scenes soon to be unfolded.
STRACHEY (p. 24): The key-note of the tragedy is struck in the simple preludings of this common sentry's midnight guard, to sound afterwards in ever-spreading vibrations through the complicated though harmonious strains of Hamlet's own watch through a darker and colder night than the senses can feel.
10. Not a mouse stirring] COLE RIDGE (p. 148): The attention to minute sounds,—naturally associated with the recollection of minute objects, and the more familiar and trifling, the more impressive from the unusualness of their producing any impression at all,—gives a philosophic pertinency to this image; but it has likewise its dramatic use and purpose. For its commonness in ordinary conversation tends to produce the sense of reality, and at once hides the poet, and yet approxi-Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, The rivals of my watch, bid them make haste.

Fran. I think I hear them.—Stand, ho! Who is there?

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier:

mates the reader or spectator to that state in which the highest poetry will appear, and in its component parts, though not in the whole composition, really is the language of nature. If I should not speak it, I feel I should be thinking it;—the voice only is the poet’s,—the words are my own.

13. rivals] Warburton: That is, partners [which is the word used here in Q,—White.] Ritson: Thus, in Heywood’s Rape of Lucrece, 1636: ‘Tullia, Aruns, associate him. Aruns. A rival with my brother in his honours.’ And in The Tragedy of Hoffman, 1631 [II, iii, p. 29. Reprint 1852], ‘And make thee rival in those governments.’ See also rivalry in Ant. & Cleop. III, vi, 8. WARNER (Var. 1821): Read ‘—- Horatio, and Marcellus The rival of’ &c. because Hor. is a gentleman of no profession, and there is but one person in each watch. Caldecott: See cor rival, 1 Hen. IV: I, iii, 207, and IV, iv, 31. Wedgwood: Lat. rivalis, explained in different ways from rival, a brook; by some from the struggles between herdsmen using the same watercourses; by others as signifying those who dwell on opposite sides of the stream. Clarendon: This is the only passage of Sh. in which the word is employed in its earlier and rarer sense [as given by Warburton].

14. COLERIDGE (p. 148): Observe the gradual transition from the silence and the still recent habit of listening in Francisco’s ‘I think I hear them,’—to the more cheerful call out, which a good actor would observe, in the ‘Stand ho! Who is there?’

16. Give] Caldecott: That is, May He, who has the power of giving, so dispense; or, I give you good night, like the Latin dare solutem. Clarendon: The more probable ellipsis is ‘God give you.’ We do not find the complete phrase ‘I give you good night,’ but we have many examples of ‘God give you good even, as Rom. & Jul. I, ii, 56, and Love’s Lab. Lost, IV, ii, 84. The omission of ‘I before such words as ‘pray’ is not a parallel case. [Compare ‘the owl . . . Which gives the stern’st good-night,’ Macb. II, ii, 3.—Ed.]
Who hath relieved you?

Fran. Bernardo hath my place.

Give you good night.

Mar. Holla! Bernardo!

Ber. Say,—

What, is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio; welcome, good Marcellus.

Mar. What, has this thing appear'd again to-night?

18. [Exit] Exit Fran. or Francisco. Qff.

19. A piece] Warburton: He says this as he gives his hand [to this effect Warburton inserted a stage-direction]. Heath and Steevens: It is merely a humorous, cant expression. Tschirschwitz: The philosophic Horatio conceives the personality of man, in its outward manifestation merely, as only a piece of himself. Moltke: It is not without significance that Sh. makes Horatio return a different answer to this question than did Bernardo. The latter by his reply of 'He' implies that he is present body and soul (for he and Marcellus have no longer any doubt; they have already seen the apparition with their own eyes); whereas Horatio by his answer implies that owing to his incredulity he is not wholly present, that he is not there with his body and soul, but that he had undertaken to watch the watch with the corporeal part only of his entire individuality. Moberly: As we say, 'something like him.'

21. Whether this should be spoken by Mar. or Hor. has occasioned discussion. Capell (i, 122) asks, 'Can it be imagined that the same person, who, but a line or two after, calls the apparition "this dreaded sight," should, in this line, call it "this thing"?' The levity of the expression, and the question itself, are suited to the unbelieving but eager Hor. Collier gives it to Hor., because Hor. had come purposely to inquire about the Ghost. Tschirschwitz: Mar. is a firm believer in the Ghost, and the allusion to it as a 'thing' betokening contempt and doubt can come only from the skeptic, Hor. Hudson: There is a temperate skepticism well befitting a scholar in this speech of Horatio's. On the other hand, Elze advocates Mar. 'Horatio, being the invited guest, remains in the background, attentive and expectant, while Marcellus is more forward in his zeal to convince Horatio of the truth of his story.' White: Horatio does not yet believe that the Ghost appeared at all.

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says 'tis but our fantasy, And will not let belief take hold of him Touching this dreaded sight, twice seen of us; Therefore I have entreated him along With us to watch the minutes of this night, That if again this apparition come, He may approve our eyes and speak to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, 'twill not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile;

And let us once again assail your ears, That are so fortified against our story, What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down, And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all, When yond same star that's westward from the pole Had made his course to illume that part of heaven Where now it burns, Marcellus and myself, The bell then beating one,— is as if 'let us tell you' had been used instead of 'let us assail your ears.' It is an instance of what the Greek grammarians called σχήμα πρός το σημανθένον. But we may omit the comma, and take 'what . . . seen' as an exegesis of 'story.' [See Abbott, § 252.]

Enter Ghost.

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again!

33. sit we] Abbott, § 361, considers this so-called imperative in the first person plural as the subjunctive, i.e. 'suppose we sit down?' 'what if we sit down?' Compare 'Break we our watch up,' line 168 of this scene.

35. Coleridge: In the deep feeling which Ber. has of the solemn nature of what he is about to relate, he makes an effort to master his own imaginative fears by an elevation of style,—itself a continuation of the effort,—by turning off from the apparition, as from something which would force him too deeply into himself, to the outward objects, the realities of nature, which had accompanied it. This passage seems to contradict the critical law that what is told makes a faint impression compared with what is beheld; for it does indeed convey to the mind more than the eye can see; whilst the interruption of the narrative at the very moment when we are most intensely listening for the sequel, and have our thoughts diverted from the dreaded sight in expectation of the desired, yet almost dreaded, tale,—this gives all the suddenness and surprise of the original appearance.

36. star] Clarke: Nothing more natural than for a sentinel to watch the course of a particular star while on his lonely midnight watch; and what a radiance of poetry is shed on the passage by the casual allusion!

Hudson: Of course the north star is meant, which appears to stand still while the other stars in its neighborhood seem to revolve around it.

37. illume] Clarendon: Not used elsewhere by Sh. 39. beating] Staunton: 'Tolling' of Q, perhaps imparts additional solemnity to this impressive preparation for the appearance of the spectre.

41-44. C. 1. SC. 1. [Note the judgement displayed in having the two persons present, who, as having seen the Ghost before, are naturally eager in confirming their former opinions,—whilst the skeptic is silent, and, after having been twice addressed by his friends, answers with two hasty syllables,—'Most like,'—and a confession of horror. O heaven! words are wasted on those who feel, and to those who do not feel, the exquisite judgment of Sh. in this scene, what can be said? Hume himself could not but have had faith in this Ghost dramatically, let his anti-ghostism have been as strong as Samson against other ghosts less powerfully raised.

42. scholar] Douce: Exorcisms were performed in Latin, and therefore only by scholars. Red: Thus Toby in Beau. and Fl.’s Night Walker II, i.—Let’s call the butler up, for he speaks Latin, And that would daunt the devil!’ In like manner the honest butler in Addison’s Drummer recommends the steward to speak Latin to the ghost in that play. Tschischwitz: Evil spirits were not exorcised by the sign of the cross alone, but cried out to the exorciser the Latin hexameter Signa te signa, temere me tangis et angis, a verse which being a palindrome reveals its diabolic origin. Moltke: See Much Ado II, i, 264: ‘I would to God some scholar would conjure her.’

44. harrows] Steevens: Compare Milton: ‘Amazed I stood, harrow’d with grief and fear.’—Comus, 565. Caldecott: It is natural that the surprise and terror of the speaker should bear some proportion to the degree of his former confidence and incredulity. Clarke: Horatio’s previous levity makes his subsequent awe, and trembling, and paleness seem like the effects of our own awe-stricken imaginations. Wedgwood: Harrow! a cry of distress; Old French, harre! harou! Crier haro sur, to make hue and cry after. Bohem. hr! hrr! interjection of excitement (frenzies), harah! Old High German, haren, to cry out. A harrowing sight is one which leads to the exclamation harrow!

53. Horatio] Corson: 'Horatio' should be uttered with an unequal upward wave, expressing the triumph of the speaker in the confirmation of his report.

55. on't] For instances of the use of 'on' in the sense of about, where we should use of, see Abbott, § 181. Moerly thinks that the preposition seems to be really 'on' here, not the en which is a mispronunciation of the word of. See also I, i, 89; IV, v, 194; Macb. I, iii, 84.

56. sensible] See Abbott, § 312, for other instances of 'might' used in the sense of 'was able' or 'could.'

57. avouch] See Abbott, § 451, for instances of substantives of similar formation. Clarendon: This substantive does not occur elsewhere in Sh. See also 'cast,' I, i, 73; 'hatch,' 'disclose,' III, i, 166; 'remove,' IV, v, 77; 'supervise,' V, ii, 23. [Also repair, V, ii, 206.]

60. armour] Was this the very armour that he wore thirty years before, on the day Hamlet was born (see V, i, 135-140)? How old is Horatio?

62. parle] Heussi erroneously supposes that this word signifies a physical combat. Clarendon (Note on Rich. II: I, i, 192): 'Parle' and parley are identical, meaning 'conference,' with a view to a peaceful settlement of differences.

63. sleded Polacks] German commentators have found more difficulty in this phrase than the English. Tieck supposes (and so translates) that the king 'dashed his sliding Pole-axe on the ice.' 'Sleaded,' he adds, 'according to a license frequent in Sh., stands for 'sleding,' which Tieck mistook for 'sliding.' The folly of this interpretation and its errors were exposed by Delius. But the spelling of the Q sleaded, and the lack of a capital P in pollax, together with its Roman letters (proper names in the old copies being usually printed in Italics), still presented inexplicable difficulties. Friesen inclined to Tieck, believing it more conceivable that the king dashed down on the ice his steaded battle-axe (whatever that might be) than that he struck an enemy or smote him to the ground, for in this case the king's visor would have been down, and Horatio could not have seen the frown on his face. Wherefore, he concludes, there is greater likelihood of finding verbal obscurities in Sh.'s text than downright nonsense. Elze and Delius follow the English commentators, and scout the idea of 'poleaxe.' The former follows Pope, on the ground that Polack is generally found in the singular, and refers to the Polish king, just as 'The Dane' is used in line 15 of this scene. Tschischwitz also follows Pope, because the plural Polacks would signify the whole Polish army, and it would be monstrous to suppose that the whole army could travel in sleighs; the sleded Polack is therefore merely the Polish king, who, and who alone, had come to the conference on a sled. If the word 'Polaxe' be adopted, insuperable difficulties attend the interpretation of 'sledded.' If it mean sledged, it refers to a battle-axe, to which a war-club (Old North German slegja) has been added, and the words 'on the ice' are used instead of the more natural phrase on the ground to indicate that the parle took place on some frozen neutral river. Leo (Notes and Queries, November 19, 1864): 'I always regarded 'sleaded,' or, as the modern editors read, 'sleded,' as nonsense. What a ridiculous position it must have been to see a king, in full armour, sitting down a sleded man, i.e. a man sitting in a sledge! It would rather not have been a king-like action. And it was, of course, not a remarkable, not a memorable, fact, that in the cold Scandinavian country in winter-time, people were found sitting in a sledge; nobody would have wondered at it,—perhaps more at the contrary. When the king frowned in an angry parle he must have been provoked to it by an irritating behaviour of the adversary, and Horatio, remembering the fact, will also bear in mind the cause of it, and so, I suppose, he used an epithet which points out the provoking manner of the Polack; and, following as much as possible the form "sleaded," I should like to propose the word sturdy, or, as it would have been written in Shakespeare's time, sturdie.' Moltke believes that he has discovered the correct reading on aesthetic as well as philological grounds; Sh. wishes to portray to us the character of the deceased king, which must be full of grandeur and dignity. Such rage as Tieck’s interpretation implies would be most unseemly; besides, by dashing down his poleaxe, he would disarm himself, which would be silly. The idea, therefore, conveyed by the word ‘smite’ must be personal to the king; it must be some gesture, not a blow delivered on an enemy. What, therefore, more natural than that he should strike his Poleaxe violently on the ice, just as any honest citizen is wont by way of emphasis to strike his fist on the table? “Sledded” is a sophistication of the printers, and the correct text is his loaded poleaxe, i.e. his poleaxe loaded with lead; or his edged poleaxe, i.e. sharpened; or, for aught to the contrary, his sledged poleaxe. This emendation of Moltke’s CLARENDON pronounces an anteclimax; Sh. having mentioned ‘Norway’ in the first clause would certainly have told us with whom the ‘angry parole’ was held. Curiously enough, this emendation of Moltke’s has been anticipated not by a German, but by an Englishman. In the Athenaeum, 3d April, 1875, C. Eliot Browne gives some notes on Hamlet by the Earl of Rochester, 1761, and on the present passage is the following: ‘Sleaded’ agrees with an axe, but not with a man; and signifies loaded with lead. . . . The king was then in an angry parole (which can’t signify fighting), and because he could not have his will most furiously struck his loaded or heavy battle-axe into the ice.’ JOHNSON: ‘Polack’ is the name of an inhabitant of Poland. Polaque is French. As in Davison’s translation of Passeratius’s Epitaph on Henry III of France, published by Camden: ‘This little stone a great king’s heart doth hold, Who ruled the fickle French and Polacks bold.’ MALONE: The corrupted form in the Q9 shows that Sh. wrote ‘Polacks.’ Since, as Dyce adds, the singular is afterwards spelled in this play ‘Polacke,’ ‘Polacke,’ ‘Polacke,’ ‘Pollock,’ and ‘Polake,’ STEEVENS preferred the singular, because we cannot well suppose that in a parley the king belaboured many, as it is not likely that provocation was given by more than one, or that on such an occasion he would have condescended to strike a meaner person than a prince. Boswell: May not Polaxe be put for the person who carried the pole-axe, a mark of rank,—as we should talk at the present day ‘of the gold stick in waiting.’ ‘He sent a great and glorious duke, one of them that held the golden pole-axe, with his retinue,’ &c.—Milton’s Brief Hist. of Motcovia.

65. jump] MALONE: In the folio we sometimes find a familiar word substituted for the more ancient. STEEVENS: ‘Jump’ and just were synonymous in Sh.’s time. Jonson refers to jump-names, i.e. names that suit exactly. ‘Your appointment was jumpe at three.’—Chapman’s May-Day. HALLIWELL: ‘Jump is rather more expressive, implying coincidence of time to the very second. [See V, ii, 362.]

70. Good now] JOHNSON (Dict.): In good time: à la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of entreaty. COLERIDGE: How delightfully natural is the transition to the retrospective narrative! And observe, upon the Ghost's reappearance, how much Horatio's courage is increased by having translated the late individual spectator into general thought and past experience,—and the sympathy of Mar. and Ber. with his patriotic surmises in daring to strike at the Ghost; whilst in a moment, upon its vanishing, the former solemn awe-stricken feeling returns upon them: see lines 143, 144. ABBOTT, § 13: 'Gunnow' (good now) is still an appellative in Dorsetshire. CORSON: 'Good' is a vocative, and 'now' belongs to 'sit down.'

72. toils] CLarendon: Causes to toil. Many verbs which we only use as intransitive were used in Shakespeare's time also as transitive; e.g. 'to fear,' 'to learn,' 'to cease,' 'to remember;' and some which we only use as transitive were used as intransitive also; e.g. 'to show,' 'to want,' 'to look.' [See Much. II, iv, 4; ABBOTT, § 290, for a list of transitive verbs formed from nouns and adjectives; thus 'pale,' I, v, 90.]

75. impress] WHALLEY: Judge Barrington (Obs. on the more Ancient Statutes, p. 300) infers from this passage that in the reign of Queen Elizabeth shipwrights as well as seamen were forced to serve. DOUCE (Lear, IV, vi, 87—Var. 1793) inconsequently denies Barrington's conclusion, by affirming that press-money was given to soldiers when they were retained in the king's service, and that it merely indicated that they were to hold themselves, at all times, in readiness to serve. The term is taken from the French 'prest,' ready, and is so written in Henry VII's Book of Household Expenses. The word is here used in its ordinary signification, as shown by the Concordance. LORD CAMPBELL (p. 103): Such confidence has there been in Shakespeare's accuracy, that this passage has been quoted both by text-writers and by judges on the bench as an authority upon the legality of the press-gang, and upon the debated question whether shipwrights, as well as common seamen, are liable to be pressed into the service of the royal navy. TSCHISCHWITZ, however, will not tolerate the idea of impressment, which he says is an injustice of wholly modern may be possibly (though I doubt it; CLARENDON says it is ‘a kind of hendiadys’), but the only example Upton gives from Sh. is from Ant. & Cleop. IV, ii, 44. MOSERLY: Law would be wanted to draw up accurately the contract, heraldry to give it a binding force in honour; as the court of chivalry ‘has cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms or of war out of the realm.’

82. _Fortinbras_] _Latham_ ( _Athenaeum_, 27 July, 1872) shows that this is a corrupt French form, equivalent to _Fierumbra_ or _Fierabras_, which is a derivative from _ferri brachium_; by translating _brachium_, side, we have _Ironside_, or, in Icelandic, _Iarnsidha_, a name actually applied to one of the old Norse Sea-kings. All that the learned critic contends for is that such names are in some small sense historical, _i. e._, that they have their origin in distorted history, rather than in arbitrary fiction.

91. return’d] EARL OF ROCHESTER (1761, Athenæum, 3 April, 1875): These lands could have no return, that had never been turned or moved from the primitive owner. Read, comart’d.
93. covenant] MALONE, DYCEx: Co-mart of the Qq is a joint bargain, a word of Shakespeare’s coinage. A mart signifying a great fair or market; he would not have scrupled to have written to mart, in the sense of to make a bargain. STEEVES: He has not scrupled so to write in Cym. I, vi, 151. WHITE: Co-mart is a singular phrase, which implies a trading purpose not well suited to a royal combat for a province. HEATH, HUNTER and BAILEY prefer compact. ABBOTT, § 494: One of these syllables is slurred; see ‘funeral,’ I, ii, 176.
94. carriage] JOHNSON: That is, the import of the article formed or drawn up between them. WHITE: In F, an s after ‘article’ seems manifestly omitted. The meaning is the carrying out of the design of the articles between the two kings.
96. unimproved] JOHNSON’s definition of this word as ‘not regulated or guided by knowledge or experience’ is denied by GIFFORD, who says that it means just the contrary. See note on reprove (in Every Man in his Humour, III, ii, p. 88), which has the same sense as improve. This last word NARES defines by 'to reprove or refute; as from improba, Latin.' SINGER (ed. 1) cites Florio: 'Improbare, to improve, to impugn,' hence 'unimproved' means unimpeached, unquestioned. In his

ed. 2, Singer adopted Q, 'as the idea excited by young Fortinbras is of one animated by courage at full heat, but at present untried,—the ardour of inexperience.' STAUN-TON apprehends that insatiable, ungovernable is meant, as in Chapman, Iliad, Book xi,—'the King still cride, Pursue, pursue, And all his unapproved hands did blood and dust embrace.' DYCE follows Gifford, and CLARENDON inclines to the definition of Singer (ed. 2), untutored.

98. Shark'd] STEEVENS: Picked up without distinction, as the shark-fish collects his prey. NARES: Collected in a banditti-like manner. The verb to shark is nearly equivalent to the modern verb to swindle.

98. list] HUNTER (ii, 214): Sight of Q., though now accounted a vulgarism, is here the better word.

98. lawless] Tschischwitz: The reading of the Ff is certainly the better; had 'lawless' been meant, the more usual word outlaw would have been used. No young noble warrior like Fortinbras would have made common cause with outlaw, but with the landless the case was different; indeed, he himself belonged to that category.

98. resolutes] For inflected participles and adjectives, see ABBOTT, § 433; and

99. food and diet] THEOBALD (Nichols, Lit. Hist. ii, 558): Is not 'food and diet' a mere tautology? Read, 'For food; and dieted to some,' &c., i.e. trained up.
'This was not repeated in his edition. Ed.] MOBERLY: For no pay but their keep.
Being landless, they have nothing to lose, and the war would at the worst feed them.

100. stomach] JOHSON: Constancy, resolution. DYCE: Stubborn resolution or courage. CALDECOTT: The redundancy of 'food and diet' may have been employed for the purpose of fixing in the mind the continuation of the metaphor in the use of the word 'stomach,' here put in an equivocal sense, importing both courage and appetite. The same play on the word is in Two Gent. I, ii, 68.

107. romage] Wedgwood (i.e. Rummage): Two words seem confounded, 1. Rummage, the proper stowing of merchandise in a ship; from Du. ruim, Fr. rum, the hold of a ship. Hence to rummage, to search among the things stowed in a given receptacle. 2. But in addition to the foregoing the word is sometimes used in the sense of racket, disturbance [as here in Hamlet]. In this sense it may be a parallel form with rumput. CALDECOTT connects it with 'Romelynge, privy mysterynge. Ruminacio, musitacion.'—Prompt. Parv.
108—125. KNIGHT explains the omission of these lines in the Ff on the ground that Shakespeare probably suppressed this magnificent description of the omens which preceded the fall of 'the mightiest Julius' after he had written Jul. Ces. Hunter (ii, 214): I wonder that the commentators should have overlooked so obvious an origin of this passage as Lucan’s description (Pharsalia, lib. i) of the prodigies which preceded the death of Cesar. We have the tenantless graves, the sheeted dead seen on the streets, the stars with trains of fire, and the moon’s eclipse. It is of little moment to ask if Lucan had been translated when Sh. wrote Hamlet. The earliest published translation, I believe, is that by Sir Arthur Gorges, 1614.
108. be] ABBOTT, § 299: As a rule it will be found that he is used with some notion of doubt, question, thought, &c.; i, in questions, as in III, ii, 100; V, i, 94; and 2, after verbs of thinking, as in the present case. Very significant is this difference in 'I think my wife be honest, and think she is not,' Oth. III, iii, 384.
109. sort] JOHNSON: The cause and effect are proportionate and suitable.
112. mote] MALONE (King John, IV, i, 92): The modern spelling of moth. Thus, ‘— they are in the aire, like atomi in sole, mothes in the sonne.’—Preface to Lodge’s Incarnate Devils, 1596. Also, ‘Festucco, a little sticke, a fease-straw, a tooth-picke, a moth, a little beam.’—Florio, 1598.
113. state] WILSON (Blackwood’s Mag., Aug. 1849, p. 252): Write henceforth for ever 'State' with a towering capital. . . . It is for the Republic and City what Realm or Kingdom is to us,—at once place and indwelling Power. 'State,'—properly Republic,—here specifically and pointedly means Reigning City. The Ghost walked in the City,—not in the Republic. . . . Every hackneyer of this
A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted dead

He murders the Phrase; he murders the Speech; he murders Horatio; he murders the Ghost; he murders the Scene; he murders the Play; he murders Rome; he murders Shakespeare; and he murders Me.'

114. mightiest] Abbott, § 8: The superlative, like the Latin usage, sometimes signifies very, with little or no idea of excess.

116. Jennens: Perhaps a line has been omitted here, by mistake, somewhat like the following: 'Tremendous prodigies in heav'n appear'd,' Hunter (ii, 2, 15) suggests, 'In the heavens above strange portents did appear.'

117, 118. Malone: When Sh. had told us that the 'graves stood tenantless,' &c., which are wonders confined to the earth, he naturally proceeded to say (in the line now lost) that yet other prodigies appeared in the sky; and the phenomena he exemplified by adding, 'As [i.e. for instance] stars with trains,' &c. I suspect that the words 'As stars' are a corruption, and that the lost words, as suggested by the passage in Jull. Caesar, ii, i, which describes the prodigies preceding his death, contained a description of 'fiery warriors fighting in the clouds;' or of 'brands burning bright beneath the stars.' What makes me believe that the corruption lies in 'As stars' is the disagreeable recurrence of 'stars' in the next line. Perhaps Sh. wrote: Astrae with trains of fire—and dews of blood Disastrous dimm'd the sun! 'Astrae' is an old word for star; see Diana, a collection of poems, printed circa 1580. [See also Florio, 'Stella': a starre, an aster, a planet.' Ed.] Knight rather favors Malone's emendation, and thinks that it gets rid of the difficulty. Caldecott finds no difficulty in conceiving the meaning of the passage as it stands, reading or understanding it thus: 'The graves opened, the dead were seen abroad [spectacles such] as,' &c. Mirtford (Gent. Mag., Feb. 1843): This line has merely got out of its place; there is nothing wanting. Transpose it to follow line 121, and read, 'As stars with . . . . . . blood, Are harbingers preceding,' &c. A. E. B [Rae] (N. & Qu., 24 Jan. 1852): It is only by the occurrence of such difficulties as the present, which, after remaining so long obscure, are at last only resolvable by presupposing in Sh. a depth of knowledge far exceeding that of his triflers, that his wonderful and almost mysterious attainments are beginning to be appreciated. In the present case he must not only have known that the fundamental meaning of aster is a spot of light, but he must also have taken into consideration the power of dis in producing an absolute reversal in the meaning of the word to which it may be prefixed. Thus, service is a benefit, disservice is an injury, while unservice (did such a word exist) would be a negative mean between the two extremes. Similarly, if aster signify a spot of light, a name singularly appropriate to a comet, disaster must, by reversal, be a spot of darkness, and disasters in the sun no other than what we should call spots upon his disk. Read, therefore, 'Asters with trains of fire,' &c. SINGER (ed. 2): As it has been conjectured that a line has been here lost, perhaps we might read: 'And as the earth, so portents fell'd the sky, Asters, with trains of fire,' &c. Disaster is used as a verb in Ant. & Cleop. II, vii, 18, and it has therefore been conjectured that we should read Disastering here. Collier thinks that these lines are probably irretrievably corrupt, but that there is no sufficient reason for supposing a line to have been lost, adding, 'We shrewdly suspect that the error lies merely in the word "Disasters," which was perhaps misprinted, because it was immediately below "As stars," and thus misled the eye of the old compositor. We do not imagine that Sh. used so affected and unpopular a word as asters or asters.' W. W. WILLIAMS proposes: 'Asters with trains of fire and dews of blood, Did overcast the sun,' &c. STAUNTON awards some plausibility to Malone's emendation, and considers Asters or Asters as an acceptable conjecture, but conceives, with Collier, that the cardinal error lies in 'Disasters,' which conceals some verb importating the obscurcation of the sun; for example, 'Asters with trains of fire and dews of blood Distempered the sun,' or 'Discoloured the sun.' DRYCE pronounces the passage hopelessly mutilated, and in his 2d ed. terms LEO's alterations 'most wretched,' and also gives a MS. emendation by BOADEN, supplying the missing line thus: 'The heavens, too, spoke in silent prodigies; As, stars,' &c. WHITE says that a preceding line, or even more than one, has been lost. CLARKE: Bearing in mind that Sh. uses 'as' many times with markedly elliptical force, and in passages of very peculiar construction, we do not feel so sure that the present one has suffered from omission. It may be that the sentence is to be understood, 'As there were stars of fire, &c., so there were disasters in the sun,' &c. FABRIO OXONIENSIS (N. & Qu., 7 Jan. 1865): Read, 'As stars (i.e. while stars) ... or, 'And stars ... Disastrous dimm'd the sun.' DUANE (N. & Qu., 3d S. viii, 30 Sept. '65): 'I am convinced Sh. wrote, 'Did usher in the sun.' This makes sense of the whole passage; it is metrical, and it produces a line in analogy with the line 'did speak and gibber.' The words did usher might be readily mistaken for 'Disasters,' and the compositor's eye may have caught the word 'stars' in the line above. KEIGHTLEY (Expositor): Perhaps for 'disasters' we might read distempers: 'distemperatures of the sun,'—1 Hen. IV: V, i. MASSEY ('The Secret Drama of Shakespeare's Sonnets, ed. ii, 1872, Supplement, p. 46) inserts lines 121–125 between lines 116 and 117, and asserts that 'it must be admitted that we recover the perfect sense of the passage by this insertion.' There is no eclipse of either sun or moon mentioned in Jul. Cesar., and its mention here, Massey infers, must point to some actual, recent instance. The Astronomer Royal, being applied to, replied by showing that there was an eclipse of the moon on 20 February, 1598, and one of the sun, almost total, on 6 March following. Hence Massey infers that this year is the date of the composition of Hamlet, and that in this passage Sh. pointed, by the eclipse of the moon, to the death or deposition of Queen Elizabeth, who had an attack of 'special sickness at the time.' Moreover, 'disasters in the sun,' Massey thinks, might have been 'sun-spots' which Sh.

'T noted,' and so 'pluralized [sic] the phenomenon.' Moerly agrees with Malone in supplying the missing line from the corresponding passage in Jul. Caesar, if a line be really lost. Clarendon: Sh. had probably in his mind the passage in North's Plutarch, Jul. Caesar p. 739 (ed. 1631): 'Certainly, destinie may easier be foreseen then avoided, considering the strange and wonderfull signes that were said to be scene before Caesars death. For, touching the fires in the element, and spirits running vp and downe it. the night, and also the solitare birds to be scene at noon daies sitting in the great market place, are not all these signes perhaps worth the noting, in such a wonderful chance as happened?' Plutarch also relates that a comet appeared after Caesar's death for seven nights in succession, and then was seen no more, that the sun was darkened and the earth brought forth raw and unripe fruit.

121. precurse] Clarendon: Only found here in Sh., though he uses 'precurser' (Pharan. & Tur, 6), and 'precurser' (Temp. I, ii, 201). It includes everything that preceded and foreshadowed the fierce events that followed.

122. fierce] Warburton explains this as terrible; Steevens, as conspicuous, glaring, and cites in proof Timon, IV, ii, 30; Hen. VIII: I, i, 54; Caldecott, bloody and terrible, as elsewhere it means extreme, excessive, citing King John, V, vii, 13, and Jonson's Sejanus, V, x (p. 140, ed. Gifford), 'O most tame slavery, and fierce flattery.'

123. omen] Theobald: 'Prologue' and 'omen' are synonymous, whereas Sh. means that these phenomena are forerunners of the events presaged by them, and such sense the addition of a single letter gives. Upton says that the 'omen' is the event itself, which happened in consequence of the omens, and cites Virgil, Aen. i, 349. Heath expressed the same idea in the phraseology of a grammarian: 'Omen,' by metonymy of the antecedent for the consequent, is here put for the event predicted by the omen. Farmer appositely cited a distich from Heywood's Life of Merlin: 'Merlin, well vers'd in many a hidden spell, His countries omen did long since foretell.'

124. demonstrated] Delius: This word is accented on the first syllable also in Hen. V: IV, ii, 54.

138. they say] Clarke: There is great propriety in the use of these words in the mouth of Horatio, the scholar and the unbeliever in ghosts.

138. spirits] For the monosyllabic pronunciation of this word, see Walker (Crit. i. 193, 205), quoted in Macb. IV, i, 127. Also Abbott, § 463; and i, i, 161.

139. Cock crows] Dyce (Few Notes, &c., p. 134): The cock used to crow when Garrick acted Hamlet, and, perhaps, also when that part was played by some of his successors; but now-a-days managers have done wisely in striking the cock from the list of the Dramatis Personae. Mitford (Cursory Notes, &c., p. 43): It is said in the life of one of the actors, I think of George Cooke, that on one occasion not fewer than six cocks were collected in order to summon the spirit to his diurnal residence, lest one cock, like one single clock, might not keep time exactly, when the matter was of importance.

139, 141. Steevens is unwilling to believe that the speeches 'Stop it, Marcellus,' and 'Do, if it will not stand,' are correctly given to Horatio, who, as a scholar, must have known the folly of attempting to commit any act of violence on a shadow; he therefore proposes to give them to Bernardo, whose first impulse, as an unlettered officer, would be to strike at what offends him. 'The next two speeches, "'Tis here!' "'Tis here!' should be allotted to Mar. and Ber., and the third, "'Tis gone!' to Hor. As the text now stands, Mar. proposes to strike the Ghost with his partisan, and yet, afterwards, is made to descant on the indecorum and impotence of such an attempt.

141, 142. Do ... gone!] Walker (Crit. iii, 261): To avoid the broken line: 'Tis gone!' which here seems to me irregular, arrange 'Do' as belonging to line 140, reading 'If 't will not ... gone!' as one line.

158. \textit{season]} MOLTKE: This passage, in connection with Francisco's remark, 'Tis bitter cold,' I, i, 8, and then with, 'But two months dead,' I, ii, 138, and lastly with, 'Sleeping within my orchard,' I, v, 59, intimates to us in the clearest manner the time of year in which Sh. wishes us to conceive the opening of this tragedy—namely, in winter, but a little before Advent; for, two months previously, about September, the older Hamlet could have taken his after-dinner nap in the open air. CALDECOTT (in a note on 'the morn,' line 166) says, that the almost momentary appearance of the Ghost, and the short conversations preceding and subsequent to it, could not have filled up the long interval of a winter's night in Denmark, from twelve till morning. KNIGHT asks, How do we know it was a winter's night? Francisco, indeed, says 'tis bitter cold;' but even in the nights of early summer in the north of Europe, during the short interval between twilight and sunrise, 'the air bites shrewdly.' That this was the season intended by Sh. is indicated by Ophelia's flowers. Her pansies, her columbines, and her daisies belong not to winter, and her 'crownet of weeds' were the field flowers of the latter spring hung upon the willow in full foliage. 'That shows its hoar leaves in the glassy stream.' Knight might have added that the reference to 'the dew of yon high eastern hill' is also inappropriate to midwinter.

161. \textit{dare stir]} WHITE: A much inferior reading to that of Ff.

162. \textit{planets]} NARRE: The planets were supposed to have the power of doing sudden mischief by their malignant aspect, which was conceived to strike objects. CLARENdon cites \textit{Tis. And.} II, iv, 14, and \textit{Cor.} II, ii, 117 We still have 'moon-

163. _takes_ DYCE: To bewitch, to affect with malignant influence, to strike with disease. See _Merry Wives_, IV, iv, 32. CLARENDON: The adjective 'taking,' for _infectious_, occurs in _Lear_, II, iv, 160. And 'taking,' as a substantive in the sense of _infection_, is found in _Lear_, III, iv, 58.

164. _gracious_ CALDECOTT: Partaking of the nature of the epithet with which it is associated, with 'blessedness;' participating in a heavenly quality, of grace in its scriptural sense; not in the sense in which it is used in _King John_, III, iv, 81. Frequently, in Sh., it does not mean, as has been interpreted, graceful, elegant, winning, pleasing simply, but touched with something holy, instinct with goodness.

165. _in part believe_ CLARKE: This assent of Horatio's to so imaginative a creed is peculiarly appropriate, coming, as it does, immediately upon a supernatural appearance, when his mind is softened to impressions, and is prepared to admit the possibility of spiritual wonders. MOBERLY: A happy expression of the half-sceptical, half-complying spirit of Shakespeare's time, when witchcraft was believed, antipodes doubted.

166, 167. Hunter (ii, 216): It must have been in emulation of these lines that Milton wrote, 'Now morn her rosy steps in th' eastern clime Advancing, sowed the earth with orient pearls.'—_Par. Lost_, v, 1. We have the same characteristics of morning in both. 'Russet,' _rosy_; 'eastern hill,' _eastern clime_; 'the dew,' _orient pearls_. STRACHEY (p. 27): We are brought out of the cold night into the warm sunshine, and we realize, in this lyrical movement, that harmony of our feelings which it was one of the objects of the Chorus to produce in the Greek Tragedy.

167. _eastern_ WARBURTON pronounced in favor of _eastward_. STEEVENS denied its superiority, and cited, '——Ulysses still An eye directed to the _eastern hill._'—_Chapman's Odyssey_, lib. xiii. STAUNTON prefers 'eastern' as more in accordance with the poetical phraseology of the period. Thus Spenser charmingly ushers in the morn, '——cheerful Chaunticleere with his note shrill Had warned once, that Phæbus' fiery Car In haste was climbing up the _Eastern Hill_, Full envious that Night so long his room did fill.'

        an attribute common to many, in cases where it would now be considered a solecism.
        Thus 'sights,' Lear, IV, vi, 35; Rich. III: IV, i, 25; Timon, I, i, 255; Pericles, I, i, 741; so 'loves,' 'consents,' Two Gent. I, iii, 48, 49; 'wills' in Hen. VIII: III, i, 68; see also Ham. I, ii, 14, 250, 253; II, ii, 14; IV, vii, 30; Macb. III, 1, 121.

173. duty] Hudson: These last three speeches are admirably conceived. The speakers are in a highly kindled state; when the Ghost vanishes, their terror presently subsides into an inspiration of the finest quality, and their intense excitement, as it passes off, blazes up in a subdued and pious rapture of poetry.

Scene II.] Coleridge: The audience are now relieved by a change of scene to the royal court, in order that Ham. may not have to take up the leavings of exhaustion. In the king's speech, observe the set and pedantically antithetic form of the sentences when touching that which galled the heels of conscience,—the strain of undignified rhetoric,—and yet in what follows concerning the public weal, a certain appropriate majesty. Indeed was he not a royal brother?
The memory be green, and that it us befitted
To bear our hearts in grief and our whole kingdom
To be contracted in one brow of woe,
Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature
That we with wisest sorrow think on him,
Together with remembrance of ourselves.
Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen,
The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 'twere with a defeated joy,—
With one auspicious and one dropping eye,
With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage,

2. that] Tschirschutz: The simpler form 'that' was used instead of the fuller form 'though that,' just as in French after queique subordinate clauses are introduced by que. [See also Abbott, § 284.]

2. befitted] Steevens: Perhaps Sh. elliptically wrote 'and us befitted,' i.e. 'and that it befitted us.' Seymour (ii, 141): Read, 'The memory's green; and it befitted us.' The greenness of the memory is not hypothetic, but real, and the proper mood of the verb could not be mistaken, if, for 'though,' we substitute as.

4. woe] Clarendon: Mourning brow. See Love’s Lab. Lost, V, ii, 754; 'the mourning brow of progeny.' For similar phrases, see IV, vi, 19; Lear, I, iv, 306, 'brow of youth' = youthful brow; Mer. of Ven. II, viii, 42, 'mind of love' = loving mind; and 1 Hen. IV: IV, iii, 83, 'brow of justice.'

11. auspicious ... dropping] Steevens: See the same thought in Wint. Tue, V, ii, 80. It is only the ancient proverbial phrase, 'To cry with one eye and laugh with the other.' Malone says that dropping may mean depressed or cast down; there could be little hesitation in rejecting this interpretation had not White so far adopted it as to substitute in the text dropping in place of 'dropping,' 'considering,' he says, 'the sense required, the distinction made between "drop" and "droop" in Shakespeare's day as in our own, and remembering how common an error is the reduplication of the wrong letter in both type-setting and chirography. Francke refers to the Homeric phrase, ἀναπόθεν γελάσαν, Ilid, vi, 484, and to Odyssey, xix, 471, and Sophocles, Electra, i920.

12. mirth ... dirge] Moerly: The studied antitheses repeated over and over in this speech give it a very artificial appearance. The king's politic and parliamentary reasons for marrying the queen remind us of the similar motives which an eminent writer supposes to have influenced Henry VIII in his prompt remarriages.

29. bed-rid] CLARENDON: Earle gives the following doubtful, but ingenious, etymology of this word: 'The Saxons called a sorcerer "dry:"... out of this word a verb was made, "be-drida," to bewitch or fascinate,... The participle of this verb, "be-drida," a disordered man, has, by a false light of cross analogy, generated the modern "bed- ridden," a half-sister of "hag- ridden."' (Philology of the English Tongue, p. 22.) The etymology commonly given explains it of one who is carried or rides on a bed. 'Bed-rid' occurs in Wint. Tale, IV, iv, 412. MOBERLY: If Earle's derivation be rejected, and the connection with ride still assumed, we must suppose that from the idea of a 'ridden' or trained horse comes the more general one of ' accustomed to,' and thence 'perpetually on,' the bed. Compare the way in which ἐδρατά is used in Homer and Herodotus simply to mean 'a place' (τὰ ἐκθέσεων

38. allow.] MALONE says Sh. should have written allows, and that many writers fall into this error, when a plural noun immediately precedes the verb. STEEVENS asserts that all such defects in Sh. were merely the errors of illiterate transcribers or printers. CALDECOTT boldly maintains that Sh. was fully justified, in cases like the present, by the usage of the best scholars and writers of the time, and gives instances from Queen Elizabeth's Seneca, and King James's Reylis and Cautelis of Scottis Poesie, from Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, and Daniel's Apologie for Ryme; and, further, that this usage was proper because the ear abhors the cacophony of an accumulation of ss, more especially in poetry, whose province is to please the ear, not offend it. KNIGHT says that the use of the plural verb with the nominative singular, a plural genitive intervening, can scarcely be detected as an error. 'The truth is, that it is only within the last half century that the construction of our language has attained that uniform precision which is now required. . . . It is remarkable that the very commentators, who were always ready to fix the charge of ignorance of the rudiments of grammar upon Sh., have admitted the following passage in a note to 2 Hen. IV by that elegant modern scholar, T. Warton: 'Beaumont and Fletcher's play contains many satirical strokes against Heywood's comedy, the force of which are entirely lost to those who have not seen that comedy.' ELZE ingeniously suggests that 'allow' may be in the subjunctive, and TSCHISCHWITZ roundly asserts that it is, 'because it is preceded by the idea of comparison implied by "than," which in Old English and Anglo-Saxon usually governed the subjunctive.' ABBOTT gives this as an instance of confusion of agreement by proximity (§ 412). For many instances (which DYC E with truth says might be multiplied without end) of apparent lack of agreement between the nominative and the verb, see ABBOTT, § 332 et seq.; Macb. II, i, 61, and Ham. III, ii, 194; III, iii, 14.

You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
And lose your voice; what wouldst thou beg, Laertes,
That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?
The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.
What wouldst thou have, Laertes?

42-45. you...thou] Abbott, § 235: The king, as he rises in his profession of affection to Laer., passes from you to thou, subsequently returning to you. [See Macb. V, iii, 37. Ed.]

42. Coleridge (p. 151): Thus with great art Sh. introduces a most important but still subordinate character, first, Laertes, who is yet thus graciously treated in consequence of the assistance given to the election of the late king's brother, instead of his son, by Polonius.

47. head] Warburton could not conceive what this line means; but after changing 'head' to blood he pronounced the sentiment just and pertinent, and the expression 'extremely fine. For the heart is the laboratory where,' &c. &c. Hammer adopted the emendation. Heath (p. 522): There is not more natural affinity and strict connection between the head and heart, though the former contrives the means by which the purposes of the latter are executed. The king considers himself the heart and Polonius the head.

47. native] Steevens: The head is not formed to be more useful to the heart, the hand is not more at the service of the mouth, than my power is at your father's service. Caldecott: The principal parts of the body are not more natural, instrumental, or necessary to each other than is the throne natural to, and a machine acted upon and under the guidance of, your father. Delius: 'Native' expresses a connection that is congenital; 'instrumental,' one that is mechanical. Clarendon refers to 1V, vii, 181, and a similar sense of 'native' in All's Well, I, i, 238.

51. leave and favour] Caldecott: Your kind permission. Two substantives with a copula being here used for an adjective and substantive; an adjective sense is given to a substantive.

53. coronation] Staunton : As an instance of the minute attention with which the finished play was elaborated from the early sketch, it may be noteworthy that, in Q4, the motive of Laertes’s visit is said to be his desire to attend the late king’s funeral. But it evidently occurred to Sh. that the acknowledgement of such an object was as little consistent with the character of Laertes as it would be palatable to the living monarch, and, accordingly, in the augmented piece the reason given by Laertes for his coming is more courtier-like.

56. pardon] Clarendon : Leave to depart. So in III, ii, 303. It is equivalent to ‘leave’ in Cymb. I, iv, 46, and 3 Hen. VI : IV, i, 87.
57. Polonius] Walker (Crit. ii, 32) : A critic who should suggest that ‘Polo

Friday says; yet I know not that it is more strange than ‘Laertes’ and fifty other similar names in our old plays.
63. graces] Caldecott : May the exercise of thy fairest virtues fill up thy time,

64. cousin] Clarendon : This word was used to denote ‘uncle’ and ‘aunt,’
’nephew’ and ‘niece,’ as well as in the modern sense. Compare Twelfth Night, I, iii, 5, where it means ‘niece,’ and III, iv, 68, where it means ‘uncle.’
64. and] Warburton suggested ‘Kind my son,’ or, as we now say, ‘Good my son,’ whereby, Warburton thinks, a pertinence is gained for Hamlet’s reply, which it otherwise lacks.
65. [Aside] The propriety of this 'aside,' which was first marked by Warburton, and has been adopted by every succeeding editor, is denied by MOLTFKE for the following reasons: There is no other instance in Shakespeare's plays where the hero is first introduced with such a very brief soliloquy; secondly, no one plays upon words when speaking to one's self; thirdly, Sh. invariably strikes the keynote of his dramas at the very outset. In this instance, after having in the first scene made us take sides with Hamlet against the King, and after having still further fostered this feeling of sympathy for the one and dislike for the other by the King's hypocritical speech from the throne, it is of the utmost importance that this opposition between the two should be emphasized, and that Hamlet himself should be shown, not only as perfectly aware of it himself, but as equally determined that the King himself should be aware of it. All these objects fail if the speech be spoken aside.

65. [Aside] HAMMER: Probably a proverbial expression for a relationship so confused and blended that it was hard to define it. JOHNSON supposes 'kind' to be here the German word for child. That is, 'I am more than cousin and less than son.' This conjecture STEEVENS properly disposes of by requiring some proof that 'kind' was ever used by any English writer for child. He adds: A jingle of the same sort is found in Mother Bombie, 1594, '—the nearer we are in blood, the farther we must be from love, the greater the kindred is, the less the kindness must be.' Again, in Gorboduc, 1561, 'In kinde a father, but not kindelynesse.' As 'kind,' however, signifies nature, Hamlet may mean that his relationship had become an unnatural one, as it was partly founded on incest. 'Kind' is used for nature in Jul. Cæs., Ant. & Cleo., Rich. II, and Tit. And. So, too, we have 'kindness,' i.e. unnatural, in Ham. II, ii, 609. MALONE gives substantially the best paraphrase: 'I am a little more than thy kinsman (for I am thy step-son), and am somewhat less than kind to thee (for I hate thee, as being the person who has incestuously married my mother). STEEVENS says that it was the King who was 'less than kind,' so also does CALDECOTT, who somewhat darkly interprets (yet MOBERLY quotes it approvingly): More than a common relation, having a confusedly accumulated title of relationship, you have less than benevolent, or less than even natural, feeling; by a play upon 'kind' in its double use and double sense—its use as an adjective, signifying benevolent; and its sense as a substantive, signifying nature. We have 'unkind' in this sense in Ven. & Ad. 204. 'Surely,' says KNIGHT, 'Hamlet applies these words to himself. The King has called him, 'My cousin Hamlet.' He says, in a supple-
King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

other work is the word 'kind' used so frequently and so unambiguously as in The Tragedie of Gorboduc. WHITE and HUDSON follow Steevens, Caldecott, and Singer in referring these words to the King. The former paraphrases: In marrying my mother, you have made yourself something more than my kinsman, and, at the same time, have shown yourself unworthy of our race, our kind. COLENSOR: This playing on words may be attributed to many causes or motives; as, either to an exuberant activity of mind, as in the higher comedy of Sh. generally; or to an imitation of it as a mere fashion, as if it were said,—'Is not this better than groaning?'—or to a contemptuous exultation in minds vulgarized and overset by their success, as in the poetic instance of Milton's Devils in the battle; or it is the language of resentment, as is familiar to every one who has witnessed the quarrels of the lower orders, where is invariably a profusion of punning invective, whence, perhaps, nicknames have in a considerable degree sprung up: or it is the language of suppressed passion, and especially of a hardly-smothered personal dislike. The first and last of these combine in Hamlet's case; and I have little doubt that Farmer is right in supposing the equivocation carried on in the expression, 'too much i' the sun,' or son.

67. i' the sun] JOHNSON: A probable allusion to the proverb: 'Out of heaven's blessing into the warm sun.' FARMER suggested that a qbible was here intended between 'sun' and 'son.' CALDECOTT: Adopting this suggestion of Farmer's, the passage must mean, 'I have too much about me of the character of expectancy, at the same time that I am torn prematurely from my sorrows, and thrown into the broad glare of the sun and day; have too much of the sun and successor and public stage without possession of my rights, and without a due interval to assuage my grief.' But a closer observer, (continues Caldecott), here says: 'One part of Farmer's suggestion is right; Hamlet means that he had not possession of his rights; but there was no qibble; the allusion is to the proverb referred to by Johnson, which means, 'to be out of house and home,' or, at least, to be in a worse temporal condition than a man was, or should be. Thus in Lear, ii, i, 168, and '—you were brought from the good to the bad, and from Goddes blessyng (as the proverb is) in to a warme sonne.'—Preface to Grindal's Profitable Doctrine, 1555. And again, 'By such art he thought to have removed him, as we say, out of God's blessing into the warm sun.'—Raleigh's Hist. of the World, 1677. His being deprived of his right, i.e. his succession to the kingdom, Hamlet might therefore call 'being too much i' the sun.' KNIGHT: There is no qibble. His meaning is explained by the old proverb. STAUNTON: Hamlet may mean, 'I am too much in the way; a mote in the royal eye;' but his reply is purposely enigmatical. DYCE (Gloss. s.v. heaven: benediction, &c.): The proverbial expression alluded to by Johnson is found in various authors, from Heywood down to Swift; the former has, 'In your running from him to me, yee runne Out of God's blessing into the warme sunne.'—Dialogue on Proverbs, Works, sig. G 2 ver. 1598; and the latter: 'Lord Sparkish. They say, marriages are made in heaven; but I doubt, when she was married, she had no friend there. Neverost. Well, she's got out of God's blessing into the warm sun.'—Polite Conversation, Dialogue 1, Works, vol. ix, p. 423. Ray gives as its equivalent, Ab equis ad asinos.

—Proverbs, p. 192, ed. 1768. Hudson inclines to Farmer's suggestion, and adds: 'Perhaps there is the further meaning implied, that he finds too much sunshine of jollity in the Court, considering what has lately happened.' In Much Ado, II, i, 331, Beatrice says of herself, 'I am sun-burned,' and this phrase Hunter (i. 250) ingeniously explains, and gives it a signification akin to the present passage. 'To be in the sun,' 'to be in the warm sun,' 'to be sun-burned,' were phrases,' says Hunter, 'not uncommon in the time of Sh., and for a century later, to express the state of being without family connections, destitute of the comforts of domestic life. There must have been some reason for this association of discomfort with what is generally considered comfort, at least among northern nations, and this reason is found in the old English version of the One Hundred and Twenty-first Psalm, in which occurs the passage, 'So that the sun shall not burn thee by day, nor the moon by night;' and as this psalm in the earlier Rituals of the Church, was used in the Churching of Women, it followed that the matron who was surrounded by her husband and children was one who had received the benediction that the sun should not burn her, while the unmarried woman, who had received no such benediction, came to be spoken of by those who allowed themselves to use such jocular expressions as one 'still left exposed to the burning of the sun,' or, as Beatrice says, 'sun-burned.' When the translation of the Scriptures was revised, in the reign of James I, the word 'smile' was substituted in this verse for 'burn,' probably on account of these ludicrous associations; and for the same reason, on the last revision of the Liturgy, this psalm was left out of the service altogether. In the first and original use of this phrase, then, it denoted the state of being unmarried; thus Beatrice uses it. It then expanded so as to include the state of those who were without family connections of any kind; thus Hamlet uses it. It expanded still wider and included the state of those who have no home, and thus it is used in Lear, II, ii, 168. And it seems to have expanded wider still, and to have been sometimes used for any species of destitution, or distress, or evil. Hamlet therefore means, 'I have lost father and mother; you heap upon me the terms 'cousin' and 'son,' but I find myself forlorn, with none of the comforts remaining which arise out of the charities of kindred.' Ingenious as this explanation of Hunter's is, it applies with more force to the phrase used by Beatrice than to that used by Hamlet; we have no examples given us that 'to be in the sun' was ever thus understood, and for it we must take Hunter's unsupported assertion. Nicholson (N. & Qu. 25 May, 1867) thus paraphrases: Ham. turns off the King's query with an apparently courtly compliment,—Nay, my lord, I am too much in the sunshine of your favour, where I show but as a shadow (too much am I in that sunshine which I detest); deposited by you as heir and successor to the throne on which by God's providence I was placed, I am now gone to the world; instead of being in clouds and rain, amid sorrow and tears for my dead father and king, I find myself in the midst of marriage festivities and carousings. Moberly thinks the proverb may have meant that a person loses all special advantages, and is reduced to light and sunshine, which are the common inheritance of all.

68. nighted] For the general rule that participles formed from an adjective mean 'made of (the adjective),' and derived from a noun, mean 'endowed with, or like (the noun),' see Abbott, § 294.

74. common] CALDECOTT: Similar examples of frailty, connected with such an event, are the things or occurrences that, he would have it inferred, were common.
CLARENDON: We have ‘common’ and ‘particular’ opposed to each other in the very difficult, and probably corrupt, passage of 2 Hen. IV: IV, i, 94; and ‘particular’ opposed to ‘general’ in Tro. & Cress. I, iii, 340. COLE RIDGE: Here observe Hamlet's delicacy to his mother, and how the suppression prepares him for the overflow in the next speech, in which his character is more developed by bringing forward his aversion to externals, and which betrays his habit of brooding over the world within him, coupled with a prodigality of beautiful words, which are the half-embodiments of thought, and are more than thought, and have an outness, a reality sui generis, and yet contain their correspondence and shadowy affinity to the images and movements within. Note also Hamlet's silence to the long speech of the King which follows, and his respectful, but general, answer to his mother.

by the mere manner of grief,—the manner as exhibited in the outward sadness.
The forms are the ceremonial signs of grief,—the moods its prevailing sullenness; the show its fits of passion. HUNTER (ii, 217): Moods and 'modes' form a various reading well worthy of attention. In Q, in support of moods, the King just before said to Ham.: 'What mean these sad and melancholy moods?' DYCE: Nothing can be plainer than that Ham., throughout this speech, is dwelling entirely on the outward and visible signs of sadness.

82. shows] DYCE (ed. 2): I once felt inclined to adopt shapes, since in the third line after this we have 'passeth show'; but 'forms' and 'shapes' would be tautological. [Moreover, the 'show' in line 85 is an intentional and emphatic repetition of the 'shows' in this line. Ed.]

85. passeth] CORSON: The older form ['passeth'] not only suits the tone of the passage better, but the two 's's and the 'sh' in 'passes show' coming together are very cacophonous. SEYMOUR (ii, 144): Ham. in this scene is impatient, fretful and sarcastic; every reply is in contradiction of what is said to him. It is not till he comes to this line that he is actuated by tender sentiment.

87. commendable] CLARENDON: The accent is on the first syllable, as in Cor. IV, vii, 51. On the second in Mer. of Ven. I, i, 111. To avoid the alexandrine, ABBOTT, § 490, accents commendable, and scans 'Tis sweet and | commend | able in | your na | ture, Hamlet.'

110. immediate] STEEVENS having said that the crown of Denmark was elective, BLACKSTONE (in a note which is not given among the other notes by him in vol. xii of the Sh. Soc.) agrees with him, adding: Though it must be customary, in elections, to pay some attention to the royal blood, which by degrees produced hereditary succession, Why, then, do the rest of the commentators so often treat Claudius as an usurper, who had deprived young Hamlet of his right by heirship to his father's crown? Hamlet calls him drunken, murderer, and villain; one who had carried the election by low and mean practices; had 'Popp'd in between the election and my hopes—' had 'From a shelf the precious diadem stole, And put it in his pocket;' but never hints at his being an usurper. His discontent arose from his uncle's being preferred before him, not from any legal right which he pretended to set up to the crown. Some regard was probably had to the recommendation of the preceding prince in electing the successor. And therefore young Hamlet had 'the voice of the king himself for his succession in Denmark;' and he at his own death prophesies that 'the election would light on Fortinbras, who had his dying voice,' conceiving that by the death of his uncle he himself had been king for an instant, and had therefore a right to recommend. When, in the fourth Act, the rabble wished to choose Laertes king, I understand that antiquity was forgot, and custom violated, by electing a new king in the lifetime of the old one, and perhaps also by the calling in a stranger to the royal blood. ELZE: It is not exactly consistent with this elective character that the queen should be called 'the imperial jointress of this warlike state.' MARSHALL (p. 16): Perhaps the comparative youth of Ham., and the fact that the kingdom was threatened by the Norwegians, were the reasons which induced the royal councillors to place the sceptre in the hands of Claudius.

110-112. with ... impart] THEOBALD: The king had declared Hamlet his immediate successor, and with that declaration he imparts as noble a love, &c. Read, therefore, 'with' no less nobility,' &c. HANMER adopted this suggestion. JOHNSON says 'impart' is impart myself, communicate whatever I can bestow; and HEATH and CAPELL both approve of this interpretation. MASON (p. 374): 'To impart toward' a person is not English. Moreover 'impart' is never neuter. Read, therefore, 'and still no less nobility of love' instead of 'with no less,' &c.; or else read, 'Do I my part toward you' instead of 'do I impart.' DELIUS suggests that Sh. probably regarded 'no less nobility of love' as the object of 'impart,' and forgot, owing to the intermediate clause, that he had written 'with no less.' BADHAM (Cambridge Essays, 1856, p. 272) believes all difficulties removed by a slight transposition, thus: 'And with nobility no less of love,' &c. The nobility that he grants him is that of heir-presumptive. DYCE pronounces this reading of Badham's 'very improper.' What would he have said had he seen TSCHISCHWITZ'S reading, which substitutes wis

127. rouse WEDGWOOD: The radical sense of the word is shown in Platt Deutsch ruse, rusie, noise, racket, disturbance; German rauschen, to rustle, roar, to do things with noise and bustle. Rausch is a flare-up, a sudden blaze; the same word is metaphorically applied to excitation from drink. Platt Deutsch rausch, Old Norse rús, Dutch roes, tipsiness. When transferred to the cognate sense of a full glass or bumer, English rouse was not unnaturally supposed to be contracted from carouse (German garaus), with which it has a merely accidental resemblance—Rouse, noise, intermperate mirth. [See I, iv, 8.]

129. too too NARES pointed out the intensive effect of this reduplication, giving instances from Holinshed and Spenser, and adding that it is common. HALLIWELL (Sh. Soc. Papers, 1844, i, 39) showed that 'too-too' is a provincial word recognized by Ray, and explained by him as meaning 'very well or good,' and that Watson a few years afterwards says it is 'often used to denote exceeding.' In proof of that too-too, as used by our early writers, is one word, denoting 'exceedingly,' and that it ought to be so printed.' Halliwell gives from the poets twelve instances, from Skelton down to Hudibras, and refers to over thirty other passages where the phrase is found, extending from Promes and Cassandra to Young's Night Thoughts. [After all, Halliwell did not so print it in his edition.] HUNTER doubts if this reduplication be emphatic. It appears to him to have been in sense neither more nor less than too, and he cites many instances from prose writers. Palsgrave, he adds, has beside to-much, to-little, &c., to too-much, to too great, to to little, to too small, answering to par trop trop peu, par trop trop grant, par trop trop petit. The pronunciation was too-too, as appears by this line of Constable's: 'But I did too-too inestimable wey her.' That the phrase was used with intensifying iteration, WHITE thinks is clear from instances like the present, and from the similar iteration of other adverbs and adjectives in the literature of Shakespeare's day. For instance: 'Thy wit dost use still still more harms to finde,—Sidney's Arcadia, ii, p. 235, ed. 1603; 'While he did live far, far was all disorder,—Ib. v, p. 430; '—your lesson is Far far too long to learn it without bocke,—Astrophel and Stella, St. 56, Ib. p. 537; 'Stop you my mouth with still still kissing me,—'Tb. St. 81, 'Tb. p. 547; 'Even to thy pure and most most loving breast,'—Sh. Son. 110. In any case the compound epithet must have originated in the frequent iterative use of the word. STAUNTON thinks that the present instance must be regarded as an exception to Halliwell's rule. Here the repetition of too is not only strikingly beautiful, rhetorically, but it admirably expresses that morbid condition of the mind which makes the unhappy prince deem all the uses of the world but weary, stale, flat and unprofitable.' HALLIWELL notes that his copy of F, reads 'too too,' with the hyphen.

129-150. Coleridge: This tedium vitae is a common oppression on minds cast in the Hamlet mould, and is caused by disproportionate mental exertion, which necessitates exhaustion of bodily feeling. Where there is a just coincidence of external and internal action, pleasure is always the result; but where the former is deficient, and the mind's appetency of the ideal is unchecked, realities will seem cold and unmoving. In such cases passion combines itself with the indefinite alone. In this mood of his mind the relation of the appearance of his father's spirit in arms is made all at once to Hamlet: it is—Horatio's speech, in particular—a perfect model of the true style of dramatic narrative; the purest poetry, and yet in the most natural language, equally remote from the inkhorn and the plough.

129. solid flesh] Moherly: The base affinities of our nature are ever present to Hamlet's mind. Here he thinks of the body as hiding from us the freshness, life, and nobleness of God's creation. If it were to pass away, silently and spontaneously, like the mist on a mountain-side, or if, curtain-like, we might tear it down by an act of violence, it may be that we should see quite another prospect; at any rate, the vile things now before us would be gone for ever.

130. resolve] Steevens: This means the same as dissolve. Nares cites: 'I could be content to resolve myself into tears, to rid thee of trouble.'—Lily's Euphues, p. 38. Caldecott: 'To thaw or resolve that which is frozen, regello.' Baret's Alvearie.

132. canon] Theobald first pointed out that this did not refer to a piece of artillery, but to a divine decree. Hunter (ii, 218): This is an unhappy word to use here. I fear the truth is that the noise of the cannon in the King's speech was still ringing in the Poet's ears. Grant White (The Galaxy, Oct. 1869): Here and in Cym. III, iv. 77-80, there is a particular assertion of the existence of a specific prohibition of suicide by Divine law. Sh. may have known the Bible, as he knew all other things in his day knowable, so much better than I do that I may not without presumption question what he says with regard to it. But I have not been able to discover any such specific prohibition. Wordsworth (Shakespeare's Knowledge and Use of the Bible, p. 149): Unless it be the Sixth Commandment, the 'canon' must be one of natural religion.

135. O fie] ELZE: In F, the emphatic iteration of exclamations is very frequent, and is probably due to the pathos of the actors. CORSON: 'Ah,' of the Qq, does not express the feeling of the speaker so well as the 'Oh' of the Ff.

136. garden] Corson (p. 10): There should be no comma after 'garden,' as the relative clause is not used simply as an additional characterization of an unweeded garden, but as an inseparable part of the whole characterization—an important distinction that should be made in pointing.

137. merely] Completely. See Macb. IV, iii, 152. Hudson: Observe how Hamlet's brooding melancholy leads him to take a morbid pleasure in making things worse than they are.

140. Hyperion] Farmer (Essay, &c., p. 37, note, ed. ii) says that this name is used by Spenser with the same error in quantity. Callecott adds, that not only did our old poets totally disregard the quantity in this instance, but the moderns also have made it altogether subservient to their convenience; and quotes Mitford as saying that, 'Spenser has Íole, Pylades, Caphareus, Rotéan.' Gascoigne, in his Ultimum Vale: 'Kind Erato and wanton Thallo.' Gray, in his Progress of Poetry: 'Hyperion's march and glittering shafts of War.' Clarendon: Sh. always accents the antepenult of the name of this god, whom he identifies with the sun, as in Homer's Odyssey, i, 8. Abbott, § 501: A trimeter couplet, with an extra syllable [satyr] on the first trimeter. It might almost be regarded as separate lines of three accents.

140. to a satyr] Mätzner (ii, 289): The comparison of one object with another becomes the expression of the relation thereto in a qualitative or quantitative regard. The object introduced by to forms the measure for the comparison. Clarendon: So in Cymb. III, iii, 26, and Ham. I, v, 52; III, i, 52.

140. satyr] Warburton (followed by White) thinks that Pan is here meant, the brother of Hyperion, or Apollo. Elze says he does not know what authority Warburton has for this relationship, which, moreover, cannot be referred to here because of the indefinite article, 'a satyr.' [Elze forgets that Pan, as well as Apollo, NARES: Spenser uses it in the same sense: 'So would I (said' th' enchanter), glad and faine Beteeme to you this sword.'—Faerie Queene, II, viii, 19. Also in Mid. N. D. i, i, 131. 'shoes' the measure of her grief, and accordingly suggests shows for 'shoes.' Compare line 82, where 'shows of grief' is defined by Hunter to be 'mourning apparel,' nay, by Hamlet himself, to be 'the trappings and the suits of woe.' What, then, are the shows with which Gertrude followed her husband's body to the grave but 'customary suits of solemn black?' What were her Niobe's tears but 'th' fruitful river in the eye?' What were these but the 'forms and shows of grief?' Let the text be thus paraphrased, 'Before my mother's "mourning-weeds" (2 Hen. VI) were worn out, she doffed them for the wedding-gear. Oh! wicked speed,' &c.

150. discourse of reason] Johnson (Dict.): Discourse. The act of the understanding, by which it passes from premises to consequences. Gifford (note on Massinger's Unnatural Combat, Works, vol. i, p. 148, ed. 1813): It is very difficult to determine the precise meaning which our ancestors gave to discourse, or to distinguish the line which separated it from reason. Perhaps it indicated a more rapid deduction of consequences from premises than was supposed to be effected by reason;—but I speak with hesitation. ... Whatever be the sense, it frequently appears in our old writers, by whom it is usually coupled with reason or judgement, which last would seem to be the more proper word. ... 'Discourse of reason' is so poor and perplexed a phrase, that [in Ham. I, ii, 150] I should dismiss it at once for what I believe to be the genuine reading: 'discourse and reason.' Boswell: The text may be supported by numerous examples. The very same phrase is used in Tro. & Cress. II, ii, 116. In the preface to Davys's Reports: 'And this idea I have conceived of him, not out of mine own imagination, or weak discourse of reason;' and Saville's Tacitus's Agricola, 1591, p. 242: 'Agricola, though brought up in the field, upon a natural wit, and discourse of reason,' cap. ix. Hamlet himself explains the phrase in IV, iv, 36. Caldecott adds, Oth. IV, ii, 153, 'discourse of thought.' Singer (ed. 2): 'Discourse of reason' means rationation. Brutes have not this reasoning faculty, though they have what is instinct and memory. Hamlet opposes the discursive power of the intellect of men to the instinct of brutes. Dyce (Glos.) cites: 'There was no discourse of reason strong enough to diuert him from thinking that he was betrayed.'—A Tragi-comicall History of our Times, &c., p. 34, 1627.

154. unrighteous] Badiam (p. 282): The Queen's tears were not unrighteous, but every way due; and though it may be urged that they were hypocritical, we learn nothing of the kind from Sh.; nor is it conceivable that where there was so much that deserved to be called by the worst names, Hamlet should be made to select such a trifle as the mere feigning of sorrow as something most unrighteous. I have little doubt that Sh. wrote, 'moist and righteous tears.'

155. flushing] Hudson: This refers to the redness of the eyes, caused by what Sh. elsewhere calls 'eye-offending brine.' Clarendon: To flush is still used transitively, meaning, to fill with water.
She married. Oh, most wicked speed, to post

157. dexterity] WARBURTON's idea that this means simply 'quickness' also occurred to WALKER, who (Crit. ii, 242) says: 'I cannot help suspecting that Sh. wrote celerity.' 'Surely not,' says DYCE (ed. 2). CLARENDON pronounces in favour of celerity, not adroitness, as in 1 Hen. IV: II, iv, 286. TSCHICHWITZ: To say that 'dexterity' means celerity, involves an intolerable pleonasm when connected with 'wicked speed.' Sh. had clearly in mind the Italian destressa, which contains the idea of deceit, and consequently of a haste or of an artifice which is morally wrong.

158. cannot] CLARENDON: Observe the double negative so frequent in older English writers. The latest instance of it we have noticed in any careful writer is in Congreve's Love for Love, iv, 4. [See III, ii, 190.]

159. heart] CORSON: 'Break' is a subjunctive, not an imperative, and 'heart' is a subject, not a vocative.

159. tongue] TSCHICHWITZ: Observe well that Hamlet is forced by his piety to maintain this silence in presence of the courtiers under all circumstances, even after the appearance of the Ghost. It is not until his heart really breaks that he breaks this silence also, and gives Horatio permission to proclaim what has happened.

160. well] COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) omits 'well.' It spoils the line, and is not mere surplusage, for how was Hamlet thus early to know whether Horatio were 'well' or not. [Collier omits it in his text.]

161. forget myself] SEYMOUR (ii, 147): This may mean: 'Or I have lost the knowledge even of myself.'

163. change that name] JOHNSON: I'll be your servant, you shall be my friend.
CALDECOTT: That is, reciprocally use: I'll put myself on an exact level with you.
HALLIWELL: Hamlet means that he will change the name Horatio has given himself, that of poor servant, to good friend; or perhaps as Johnson explains it.

TSCHICHTZITZ: It still corresponds with ‘machen,’ in our phrase of courteous greeting: ‘Was machen Sie?’ KIGHTLEY (Expositor, p. 286): I suspect that here, and in a following line, and in II, ii, 266, we should read ‘makes’ with an ellipsis of be. The answers seem to indicate it.

167. even] JOHNSON: There is no need of Hamner’s change. Between the first and eighth scene of this act a day must pass; and how much of it is over there is nothing to determine. The King has held a council. It may as well be evening as morning. STEEVENS: The change might be justified by I, i, 174. TYRWHITT: Good even or dim was the usual salutation from noon, the moment that good morrow became improper; from the course of the incidents, precedent and subsequent, the day may here be well supposed to be turned of noon. [See Rom. & Jul. II, iv, 98.] WHITE (Sh. Scholar, p. 409): This is addressed to Bernardo, whom Hamlet does not recognize.

170. hear] DYCE: The next line proves the reading of FF to be erroneous. HUNTER (ii, 219): The reading of the FF is better, even if it had not the effect of obviating the disagreeable recurrence of the sounds ‘hear’ and ‘ear.’ CORSON also thinks the FF more euphonious.

180. baked-meats] Collins: It was ancienly the general custom to give a cold entertainment to mourners at a funeral. In distant counties this practice is continued among the yeomanry. See The Tragique Historie of the Faire Valeria of London, 1598: 'His corps was with funerall pompe conveyed to the church, and there solemnly entered, nothing omitted which necessitie or custom could claim; a sermon, a banquet, and like observations.' Again, in the old romance of Syr Legore, no date: 'A great feaste would he holde Upon his quenes mornynge day, That was buryed in an abbay.' Malone: See, also, Hayward's Life and Raigne of King Henrie the Fourth, 1599, p. 135: 'Then hee [King Richard II] was obscurely interred,—without the charge of a dinner for celebrating the funeral.' Douce: This practice was certainly borrowed from the cena feralis of the Romans, alluded to in Juvenal's 5th Satire and in the Laws of the Twelve Tables. It consisted of the offering of a small plate of milk, honey, wine, flowers, &c. to the ghost of the deceased. In the North this feast is called an arval or arval-supper; and the loaves that are sometimes distributed among the poor, arval-bread. John Addis, Jun. (N. & Qu. 9 Feb. '67) cites an apposite passage from Massinger: 'The same rosemary that serves for the funeral will serve for the wedding.'—Old Law, IV, 1, TschiSchwitz: This is one word. See Chaucer (Cant. Tales, v. 344): 'Withouten bake mete never was his house.' The combination of a funeral and a marriage feast contained nothing repugnant to the ancient Northern mind. At the end of cap. 14 of Frithiof's Saga, it is related that Frithiof prepared a sumptuous feast, to which came all his followers, and thereupon was held the funeral feast of Hring the King, and likewise the marriage feast of Frithiof and Ingiborg. Here in Hamlet what was so abhorrent was that the widow should have married so quickly. Clarendon: We have 'bakedmeats' in Gen. xi, 17.

two opposite meanings from the single Anglo-Saxon word derian, to hurt, thence deriving our word dear—not cheap (when the season dereth the crops, causing a death); hence what is not cheap is precious, valued; whence comes the secondary meaning of dear—beloved. In this passage 'dearest' has reverted to its original meaning of hurtful, mischievous. This plausible derivation, or rather explanation, of the two distinct and contrary meanings of the word has been followed by Richardon in his Dictionary, and by the edd. above named, except Craik, who detected Tooke's error in tracing the word, in both its meanings, to one root, by showing that the word dear—high-priced, precious, beloved, is the Anglo-Saxon drére, dré, dfre, from the verb déran or dyran, to hold dear, to love. Craik thus explains the different senses which the word assumes: the notion properly involved in it of love having first become generalized into that of a strong affection of any kind, thence passes on into that of such an emotion the very reverse of love, or as Clarendon concisely states it: 'dear' is used of whatever touches us nearly either in love or hate, joy or sorrow. Mätzner (i, 196) gives a list of two hundred and thirty-five words which had originally different forms (and of course different meanings), but which now are found in only one form; among them (i, 206) is dear, with the different original forms pointed out by Craik. See 'dear soul,' III, ii, 58.

take wast of Q, in the sense of waist, or middle of a person, is to impute mere tautology to Sh., instead of the fine meaning of deserted emptiness and stillness of remains the same,—the dead void; and 'vast' seems to have been used substantively in this sense by Sh., if not by his contemporaries. CLARENDON: It here means emptiness; the time when no living thing is seen. We have it also in the sense of an empty space in Wint. Tale, I, i, 33. 'Wast,' i. e. 'waste,' is in origin the same word as 'vast,' and has the same sense. There is, of course, an easy pun on waste and waist, but it is not probable that Sh. meant to make one in this place.

dissolved,—separated drop by drop. 'Almost to jelly.' COLLIER (Notes, &c., p.
433): Neither 'distill'd' nor bestill'd can be satisfactory; but it is apparent that 'the ill'd' of F, was a misprint for bechill'd. Bernardo and Marcellus were almost chilled to jelly by their apprehensions, 'the cold fit of fear' having come powerfully on them. DYCE (Notes, &c., p. 135): Is there no something strange in such an expression as 'human bodies chilled almost to jelly by fear'? (I doubt if the verb still (to fall in drops, melt) ever was, or could be, used with the augmentative prefix be.) According to the Q, they melted, dissolved almost to jelly with, &c. A passage of Claudian (De Sexto Cons. Hon. v, 345), 'liquefactaque fulgure cuspis Canduit, et subitis fluxere vaporibus enses,' is thus rendered by Addison, 'Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd.' SINGER (ed. 2): So also in Sylvester's Du Barius (ed. 4, p. 764), 'Melt thee, distill thee, turne to wax or snow.' COLLIER
ed. 2): Jelly becomes jelly only by being 'bechill'd,' and when it is argued that 'distill'd' may mean melted, it is forgotten that Horatio does not say that his comrades were melted to 'jelly,' for jelly is no longer jelly when melted, but that they were 'bechill'd to jelly;' it is jelly, because it has been 'bechill'd.' Besides, Sh.
ever uses 'distill'd' (often as it occurs in his plays) as melted, but as extracted;
and even in this very tragedy, and in this very Act, he speaks of a 'leperous distil-ment' as procured by distillation from 'cursed hebenon.' Therefore we feel morally certain that Shakespeare's word here was 'bechill'd.' BAILEY (i, 47) dissents from

Collier on physical grounds. 'Solids cannot be chilled into gelatine.' 'It is the exclusive privilege of liquids (and liquids only of a certain description) to be cooled down into that tremulous substance. Hence the true reading seems to stare us in the face: "whilst they distil'd Almost," &c.' 'It may deserve mentioning that when the chilling effects of any passion are chiefly in view, it is the blood which is usually described by Sh. as the seat of the refrigeration.' In view of the fact that Sh. has several times used the word 'thrill' to express the effect of terror, Bailey suggests 'a plausible reading;' so he says, for the present passage: 'while they both thrill'd.' 'Or,' if the prefix be should be prefixed, we might read 'while they be-thrill'd.' Huds. : 'Distill'd (meaning to fall in drops, to melt) is a very natural and fit expression for the cold sweat caused by intense fear.' Corson: 'Be-still'd' seems to be used as a strong form of 'still'd,' as the next line shows. I get no meaning out of 'distill'd.'

205. act] Johnson: 'Fear' was the cause, the active cause, that 'distill'd' them by the force of operation which we strictly call act in voluntary, and power in involuntary, agents, but popularly call act in both. Tschirschewitz: Here used like the Latin actus, and, like it, is passive, not active. Compare 'fertur magno mons improbus actu'—Virgil; so also the Italian atto.

207. dreadful] For adjectives which have both an active and a passive meaning, see Abbott, § 3. Thus 'sensible,' I, i, 57 (also passive in Macb, II, i, 36); 'plausible' (passive), I, iv, 30. See also Walker (Crit. ii, 78).

of no consequence. Be it remembered likewise that the words are not as lately pronounced upon the stage: "Did not you speak to it?"

216. it head] CRAIK (Note on Jul. Cas. I, ii, 124): The word its does not occur in the authorized translation of the Bible; it is, however, found in Sh. There is one instance [the only one, according to Rolfe, where it is not spelled it's, with an apostrophe] in Meas. for Meas. I, ii, 4. But the most remarkable of the plays in this particular is probably Wint. Tale; where in I, ii, 151-158, we have as many as three instances in a single speech of Leontes; again in I, ii, 266, and III, iii, 46. On the other hand, we have the following instances in F, of the use of it in a possessive sense, where we now use its: Wint. Tale, I, iii, 178; III, i, 101; King John, II, i, 160, 161, 162; Lear, I, iv, 235 (his); the passage 'that nature which contempnses it origin,' in Lear, IV, ii, 32, is not in F; but Q, has itth and Q, it. There is also one passage in our English Bible, Levit. xxv, 5, in which the reading of the original edition is 'of it own accord.' The modern reprints give 'its.' [Rolfe adds: In the Geneva Bible, 1579, we have 'it owne accorde,' in Acts, xii, 10.] Trench (English Past and Present) doubts whether Milton has once admitted its into Paradise Lost, 'although, when that was composed, others frequently allowed it.' But he does use it occasionally, e.g. 'The mind is its own place.'—Par. Lost, I, 254; and '—falsehood... returns Of force to its own likeness.'—ib. iv, 813. [Rolfe: See also Hymn on the Nativity, 106.] Generally, however, he avoids the word, and easily does so by personifying most of his substantives; it is only when this cannot be done that he reluctantly accepts the services of the little parvenus monosyllable. Bacon has frequently his in the neuter. Trench notices the fact of the occurrence of its in Rowley's Poems as decisive against their genuineness. The modern practice is the last of three distinct stages through which the language passed, as to this use of its, in the course of less than a century. First, we have his serving for both masculine and neuter; secondly, we have his restricted to the masculine, and the neuter left with hardly any recognized form; thirdly, we have the defect of the second stage remedied by the frank adoption of the heretofore rejected its. And the most curious thing of all in the history of the word its is the extent to which, before its recognition as a word admissible in serious composition, even the occasion for its employment was avoided or eluded. This is very remarkable in Sh. The very conception which we express by its probably does not occur once in his works for ten times that it is to be found in any modern writer. So that we may say the invention or adoption of this form has changed not only our English style, but even our manner of thinking. The Saxon personal pronoun was, in the nominative singular, He, masculine; Hē, feminine; Hit, neuter. He we still retain; for Hē we have substituted She, apparently a modification of Scē, the feminine of the demonstrative; Hit we have converted into It (though the aspirate is still often heard in the Scottish dialect). The genitive was Hīre for the feminine (whence our modern Her), and His both for the masculine and the neuter. It is to be understood, of course, that its, however convenient, is quite an irregular formation; the _t_ of _it_ (originally _hi_') is merely the sign of the neuter gender, which does not enter into the inflection, leaving the natural genitive of that gender (hi, hi-) substantially identical with that of the masculine (he, he-hi, hi-i).

To the foregoing Rolfe adds the following instances of _it's_ in _F_1: Temp. I, ii, 95; _Jb._ I, ii, 2 Hen. VI: III, ii, 393; 2 Hen. VIII: I, i, 18. It, or _yt_ possessive is found in _F_1 in fourteen passages. The following are not mentioned by Craik: Temp. II, i, 163; 2 Hen. IV: I, ii, 131; Hen. V: V, ii, 46; Rom. & _Jul._ I, iii, 52; Timon, V, i, 151; Ham. I, ii, 216; _Jb._ V, i, 209; _Ant._ & _Cleo._ II, vii, 49; _Jb._ II, vii, 53; _Cym._ III, iv, 160. Rolfe concludes: No argument in regard to the date of the plays can be based upon the occurrence of these various forms of the possessive _its_. We find all three in some of the earliest plays, two different forms in the very same play, and _it's_ in _Hen._ VIII, which, according to White, is the latest of the plays. The simple fact is, that Sh. wrote in the early part of that transitional period when _it's_ was _beginning_ to displace _his_ and _her_ as the possessive of _it_ and that at just that time the forms _it_ and _it's_ were more common than _its_, though this last was occasionally used even before the end of the 16th century. See Wright's _Bible_ _Word-Book_, and Marsh, _Lectures on Eng. Lang._, First Series, p. 397. [See also Matzner, i, 296, and Mommsen, _Rom._ & _Jul._, p. 22. Indeed, this whole note ought to have been given in the Variorum ed. of _Rom._ & _Jul._ I, iii, 52, but my only apology for this and similar omissions in that volume is the terror with which the endless pages in prospect inspired me in those early days; and I have not outgrown it yet. It is a most inimitable circumstance in Sh. to make the Ghost, which has been so long obstinately silent, and of course must be dismissed by the morning, begin or rather prepare to speak, and to be interrupted at the very critical time of the crowing of a cock. Another poet, according to custom, would have suffered his Ghost tamely to vanish without contriving this start, which is like a start of guilt,—to say nothing of the aggravation of the future suspense, occasioned by this preparation to speak and to impart some mysterious secret. Less would have been expected had nothing been promised.

226. Arm'd] KNIGHT. This passage is sometimes read and acted as if it applied to the manner in which Hor. and Mar. were to hold their watch; and we have somewhere seen a criticism which notes line 228 as a memorable example of an abrupt transition. Without doubt it is asked with reference to the Ghost. Hamlet anticipates the re-appearance of the figure when he asks, line 225, and proceeds to those minute questions which carry forward the deep impressions of truth and reality with which everything connected with the supernatural appearance of the Ghost is invested.

229. beaver] Florio (A World of Words, 1598) gives: Banitra, the chin piece of a caske or head-peece. Bullokar (English Expositor, 1616) defines: Beauer In armour it signifieth that part of the helmet which may bee lifted vp, to take breath the more freely. Douce (i, 439) shows that it is frequently used to denote the whole helmet, as in 3 Hen. VI: I, i, 12, and gives representations of the helmet and its parts; as also KNIGHT at 2 Hen. IV: IV, i, 120. Worcester cites Stephen- son as deriving it from Fr. beauroir, because it enabled the wearer to drink. The definitions of Richardson and Wedgwood are not borne out by references to Sh. Hunter (ii, 219): Some say it ought to be 'he wore his beaver down,' but Sh. has the authority of one who ought to know something concerning what belongs to knights and chivalry: 'they their bevers up did rear.'—Faerie Queene, IV, vi, 25.

232. Pale or red] CORSON: The meaning is marred without the comma of F, after 'Pale.' Hamlet must be supposed to utter 'Pale' as a thing of course, pale-ness being the conventional idea attached to a ghost. The word should be uttered.

Ham. therefore proposes the question of a beard of a different colour to that of his father's. To which Hor., giving a negative to the question, describes the beard as it really was. [This ingenious suggestion carries probability almost sufficient to justify its adoption in the text; for two reasons—First, After an affirmative question we instinctively anticipate the answer yes, not 'no,' which would more naturally follow a negative question: His beard was not grizzled? Secondly, It is eminently characteristic of the precise Horatio (e'en the justest man Ham. had ever found) to draw a nice distinction between 'grizzled' and 'sable silvered.' He had been most exact in his estimate of the time the Ghost stayed, and he would be equally exact even as to the colour.

and texture of the beard. Ed.] CORSON, however, strongly upholds Ff; he says: Hamlet is subjecting his friends to a searching examination, and when he asks the question, 'His Beard was grisy?' he adds, with decision, 'no,' as though he had caught them on this point. 'No' should be read with a strong downward inflection.

241. I'll] CORSON: This is strongly emphatic, and it can be better made so in 'I'll' of the Fi than 'I will' of the Qa. It seems, too, that the abbreviated form suits better Hamlet's off-hand mode of speech with his friends.

242. warrant] For instances of words composed of two short syllables contracted in pronunciation into monosyllables see WALKER, Vers. 65; or ABBOTT, § 463.

244. gape] STAUNTON: It here, perhaps, signifies yell, howl, roar, &c., rather than yawn or open, as in Hen. VIII: V, iv, 3. CLARENDON: And so, perhaps, 'a gaping pig.'—Mer. of Ven. IV, i, 54.

247. tenable] CALDECOTT and KNIGHT (ed. i.) defend the misprint of Ff. Both paraphrase it: 'Impose a threefold obligation of silence;' and in proof that this was a favorite scale or measure with Sh., Caldecott adds some examples, which Mrs Clarke's Concordance will more than treble. WHITE: We might have had some trouble in correcting the misprint of the Ff, if it had not been for the Qa. BAILEY (i, 51) objects to 'tenable' on three grounds: First. 'Tenable in silence' is scarcely English; no ordinary combination of circumstances requires it. Second. It does not express the meaning here intended. Ham. enjoins that the matter be held in silence, not holdable in silence; the latter is a common condition of all intelligence. Thirdly. 'Tenable' is nowhere to be found in Sh.; 'intenable' occurs once, and singularly enough in an active sense—incapable of holding, not incapable of being held. Furthermore, in addition to these three reasons, the point of the line is lost if the right word, 'treble,' be excluded. Ham. is addressing his three companions, and he lays upon all three a solemn injunction: 'Let it be treble in your necting it with 'o'erwhelm,' makes equally good sense, and adapts the construction of the sentence better to its vocal expression.

Scene III.] Coleridge: This scene must be regarded as one of Shakespeare's lyric movements in the play, and the skill with which it is interwoven with the dramatic parts is peculiarly an excellence of our poet. You experience the sensation of a pause without the sense of a stop.

1. embark'd] Corson: As applied to things, imbark't or imbark't seems preferable to 'embark'd.'

2. as] Abbott, § 109: We almost always apply as, like because, to the past and the present; Sh. often uses it of the future, in the sense of 'according as.' In the present passage a modern reader would at first naturally suppose 'as' to mean since, or because, but the context shows it means 'according as.'

2. benefit] Walker (Crit. i, 94): It is to be observed that the words benefit and beneficial, in our old writers, almost uniformly involve the idea of a benefactor, which has since been dropped, except in cases where the context implies that idea, i.e. conferring or receiving a benefit.

5. fashion] Clarendon: That which is changeable and temporary. See Lyly's Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 81: 'Tush Philautus was liked for fashion sake, but never loved for fancie sake.'

6. toy] That is, caprice, as in Rom. & Jul. IV, i, 119: 'inconstant toy.' Sh. uses this word, as Staunton says (King John, I, i, 232), with great latitude. See its use in I, iv, 75. Clarendon: A pastime and fancy, not a deep affection. See Oth. I, iii, 269.

6. blood] Dyce (Gloss.): Disposition, inclination, temperament, impulse. [See line 116 of this scene, and III, ii, 64.]

7. primy] Nares: Early, belonging to the spring; perhaps, peculiar to this passage.
8. Forward] Caldecott: Early, ripe before due season; and thence having in it the principles of premature decay.
8. To aid the scansion of this line different expedients have been devised (see Text. Notes). Mommsen (Perkins-Shakespeare, Berlin, 1854, pp. 360, 496) throws the accent on the second syllable of 'lasting,' as we sometimes find it in words which are now paroxytone; e.g. semblance, marchant, &c. To pronounce it as a trochee, lasting, is against the Shakespearian usage of admitting a trochee only after a pause. But, Elce asks, Why cannot both the last two feet be trochees: 'sweet not | lasting?' Abbott and Clarendon prolong 'sweet' into a disyllable (§ 484, and see Macb. I, ii, 5). Moherly finds the solution in 'permanent.' 'The meaning of this word induces a slight pause, and so gives it the time of an additional syllable.' [In other words, the voice of an intelligent reader cues instinctively such defects in metre; if they be defects.]
9. suppliance] Johnson: It is plain that perfume is necessary to exemplify the idea of sweet, not lasting. With the word suppliance I am not satisfied, and yet dare hardly offer what I imagine to be right. I suspect that suffiance, or some such word, formed from the Italian, was then used for the act of fumigating with sweet scents. Mason: An amusement to fill up a vacant moment. Steevens: What was supplied us for a minute. It is found in Chapman's ninth Iliad.
10. so?] Corson [who prefers the pronunciation of the QqFf]: This speech is certainly meant to express Ophelia's submissiveness to her brother's opinion, not to question the correctness of it.
11-14. For...withal] Tschischwitz transposes these lines to follow line 32, because, as he alleges, they afford not the slightest explanation to 'Think it no more,' and because they have been evidently inserted in the wrong place through some blunder, and are intelligible only when restored to their proper order, as he deems it.
12. thews] Rolfe (Craik's Jul. Caes. I, iii, 81): That is, muscular powers; as in all the three instances in which Sh. uses the word (the third is 2 Hen. IV: III, ii, 276). It comes from the Saxon theow or theoh, whence also thigh, and must not be confounded with the obsolete thew—manners, or qualities of mind, which is from the Saxon theaw. This latter theaw is common in Spenser, Chaucer, and earlier writers; the former is found very rarely before Shakespeare's day. It occurs (as cited by NARES) in Turbervile's Ovid's Epistles, 1567: 'the thews of Helens passing form.' In the earlier version of Layamon's Brut, at the end of the twelfth century (verse 6361): 'Monnene strengest of maine and of theawe of alle thissere theode' (of men strongest of main, or strength, and of sinew, of all this land). But Sir F. Madden remarks (III, 471): 'This is the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities, nor has any other passage of an earlier date than the sixteenth century been found in which it is so used.' TSCHEWITZ: The is probably not a sign of the plural, but a derivative affix for th, whence we may infer an abstract theth, denoting growth, in later English threw.
The inward service of the mind and soul

12. this] CORSON (p. 12); 'His' of F, stands for 'nature': as nature's temple grows, the service within widens. There is a metaphor implied.
12. temple] See Macb. II, iii, 64; R. of L. 719, and 1172, in proof of CALDETT's remark that this is never but on grave occasions applied to the body.

13. inward service] CALDETT: As the body increases in bulk, the duties calling forth the offices and energies of the mind increase equally. MOBERLY: 'Ἀνάγονται τῷ οὐλομένῳ καὶ τῷ δινόσαντι καὶ τῷ φίλόνι.—Herodotus, iii, 134.

14. Grows] HUDSON: The passage would seem to imply that Hamlet is not so old as he is elsewhere represented to be.

15. cautel] DYCK (Gloss.): Craft, deceit. 'Cautelle: A wile, cautell, sleight; a crafty reach, or fetch, guileful devise or endeavor; also, craft, subtiltie, trumperie, deceit, rousenage.'—COTGRAVE. CLARENDON: Only used elsewhere by Sh. in L. C. 303. RUSHTON (Sh.'s Testamentary Language, p. 43); Sh. may have written these lines remembering the following passage from Swinburne's Treatise on Wills, 1590: 'There is no cautel under heaven, whereby the libertie of making or revoking his testament can be utterly taken away,'—p. 61. Again Laertes says, line 20, 'He may not care for himself,' and according to Swinburne, 'it is not lawful for legataries to carve for themselves, taking their legacies at their own pleasure,' &c.—p. 50.

16. virtue] JOHNSON: It here seems to comprise both excellence and power, and may be explained the pure effects. MASON: His virtuous intentions. STAUNTON: It here seems to import essential goodness; as we speak of the virtues of herbs, &c.

16. will] CALDETT: The Ff contain a clear misprint by the eye catching and giving the same word twice.

ACT I, SC. iii.]
For he himself is subject to his birth;
He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself, for on his choice depends
The safety and health of this whole state,
And therefore must his choice be circumscribed
Unto the voice and yielding of that body
Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves you,
It fits your wisdom so far to believe it
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.

20. Carve] Clarke (Note on 'Carver,' Kich. II: II, iii, 144). Sh. uses the verb to 'carve' very expressively to signify 'hew recklessly' and to 'select selfishly.'

21. safety] Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 22) conjectured that 'sanctity' of Ff should be sanity, because the welfare, preservation of the state was in some degree concerned by Hamlet's choice of a wife. Theobald calls attention to the same misprint of one word for the other in II, ii, 208, and Macb. IV, iii, 144. Walker (Crit. iii, 88, also Vers. 159) makes the same conjecture: 'Sanity must surely be the right reading; sanctity, at any rate, is absurd. Frequentius, ut sepe fit, pro rariari; the pulpit having familiarized sanctity to men's minds.' Both Dyce and Abbott, § 484, agree with Walker. The latter says that the present line could not be scanned without prolonging both 'health' and 'whole.' Such a double prolongation is extremely improbable, considering the moderate emphasis required. More probably, Theobald's suggestion is right.' Malone: The editor of Ff, finding the metre defective, in consequence of the article being omitted before 'health,' instead of supplying it, for 'safety' substituted a word of three syllables. Collier: 'Safery' was often of old, as here, pronounced as a trisyllable.

21. this] Corson (p. 12): The of Ff is better than 'this,' 'state' being used abstractly.

26, 27. As... deed] Caldecott [see Text. Notes]: As he, in that peculiar rank and class that he fills in the state, and the power and means thereto annexed, may enable himself to give his professions effect. Collier: Sect and force may be strained into a meaning, but 'act and place' require no such effort. The latter is the reading of the (MS) also. White: What tolerable sense has either Q or F, in connection with the context? F, manifestly corrects two errors, but makes one—'force' for place. 'Sect' is class, rank, or, in the slang of society, set. So in Lear, V, iii, 18.
Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs,
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister,
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon;
Virtue itself 'scape not calumnious strokes;
The canker galls the infants of the spring
Too oft before their buttons be disclosed,
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminant.
Be wary then; best safety lies in fear;
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson keep,
As watchman to my heart. But, good my brother,
Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven,
Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads

43. best] The not uncommon omission of the article before superlatives is perhaps to be explained, according to Abbott, § 82, by the double meaning of the superlative, which means not only 'the best of the class,' but also 'very good.'

44. though ... near] For instances of the omission of the predicate verb, see Mätzner, ii, 43, though I can find no parallel instances in the conjunctive clauses there noted. Clarendon appositely cites Cymb. IV, iv, 23.

45. Coleridge: You will observe in Ophelia's short and general answer to the long speech of Laertes the natural carelessness of innocence, which cannot think such a code of precautions and prudences necessary to its own preservation.

48. pastors] Tschischwitz does not scruple to change this to the sing. 'pastor,' parsing the first 'Do' as the auxiliary verb to the second, as well as to 'show,' while 'Himself' remains in grammatical agreement with what has preceded.

49. puff'd and reckless] Caldecott: Bloated and swollen, the effect of excess; and heedless and indifferent to consequences. 'Ignavus, inefficax, recklesse.'—Ortus Vocab. 1514.

51. fear] For other instances of its use as 'fear for,' see III, iv, 7; IV, v, 118; and Schmidt, Sh. Lex. Abbott, § 200: So also the preposition is omitted after 'deprive,' I, iv, 73.

52. stay] Morely: Laertes seems to think that Ophelia's spirited reply is giving the conversation a needless and inconvenient turn; for that for sisters to lecture brothers is an inversion of the natural order of things.

53. double] Delius: Laertes had already taken leave of his father.

57. There] In this punctuation all succeeding edd. have followed Theobald, who could see no reference which 'there,' as punctuated in the Ff, could have, except it be to the 'shoulder' of the sail. Corson upholdeth the Ff:—'there, certainly means at the port, where the ship is all ready to sail, and the attendants are waiting for him. See the 83d line.

59. Warburton: Sh. had a mind to ornament his scenes with these fine lessons of social life; but his Polonius was too weak to be the author of them, though he was pedant enough to have met with them in his reading, and fop enough to get them by heart, and retail them for his own. Capell (i, 124): 'This observation' [of Warburton's] 'is not ill-grounded; for the moment he's at the end of his lesson, we are regal'd with a style very different, and flowers of speech is his way.\^ CALDECOTT: These golden precepts very ill accord with the character and intellect imputed to Polonius in the rest of the play, where he appears to be what Hamlet calls him, a 'tedious old fool,' a 'wretched rash fool,' 'a foolish prating knave.' KNIGHT adds: 'It is remarkable that in Q, the "precepts" are printed with inverted commas, as if they were taken from some known source; or, at any rate, as if Polonius had delivered them by an effort of memory alone.' DYCE (Remarks, &c. p. 207): Not at all 'remarkable.' In the Q1 (except Q₃), a speech of the Queen, IV, v, 17-20, is 'printed with inverted commas.' [See textual notes on lines 36, 38, 39, of this scene. Ed.] In various other early plays the Gnomic Portions are so distinguished [Dyce here cites many examples from early poetry of thus marking maxims; he might have descended to much later times. Warburton, in his edition of Sh., uniformly keeps the custom. Ed.] HUNTER (ii, 219): Polonius is the dull, prosing politician of the time. There is probably much personal satire in the character. It was the practice of those politicians to deliver maxims to their children, to be their guide in life. Thus Lord Burghley left ten admirable precepts of worldly prudence to his son Robert, afterwards Earl of Salisbury, which may be read in the Desiderata Curiosa; and in The Harleian Miscellany is a letter from Sir Henry Sydney to Philip his son, containing divers lessons of prudence delivered in a didactic form. That there was some individual nobleman more particularly pointed at in the character of Polonius I can entertain no doubt, nor that some attentive observer of the men of those times will one day trace the Poet home. Could it be the Lord Chamberlain? Prynne alludes to the practice of bringing living noblemen upon the stage, and names particularly the Lord Admiral, the Lord Treasurer, and Count Gondomer, as persons with whom the stage had made free. RUSHTON (Shakespeare's Euphuis, p. 46): The advice of Euphues to Philautus is probably the origin of these few precepts of Polonius. For line 59, see Euphues:—Be not lavish of thy tongue. 'Lines 64, 65, thus Euphues:—Every one that shaketh thee by the hand, is not joined to thee in heart.' Lines 66, 67, Euphues:—Be not quarrellous for every light occasion: they never fight without provoking, and once provoked they never cease.' Line 68, Euphues: 'It shall be there better to hear what they say, than to speak what thou thinkest.' [See also II, ii, 86; and FRENCH, in Appendix, p. 239.]

59. character] CLARENDON: Used with the accent either on the first or second syllable. As a substantive, with the latter accent, it is found in Rich. III: III, i, 81; as a verb, in Two Gent. II, vii, 4. [R. of L. 807.] CALDECOTT: The verb has the accent on the first syllable in Son. 122, 2.

60. unproportioned] CLARENDON: Unsuitable, not in harmony with the occasion.

61. vulgar] CLARENDON: Common. See Twelfth N. III, i, 135, where 'vulgar proof' = common experience; as 'vulgar tongue' = common language.

62. The] CORSON: The use of 'them' in next verse makes 'The' preferable to 'Those,' which serves to strengthen the pleonasm.

62. hast] SEYMOUR (ii, 153): 'Hast' is not habes, but the auxiliary verb,— Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel,
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatch’d, unfeathered comrade.
Beware
Of entrance to a quarrel; but, being in,
Bear’t, that th’ opposed may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice;
Take each man’s censure, but reserve thy judgement.
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express’d in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man;
And they in France of the best rank and station

74. Are...that STEVENS: 'Chief' may be used adverbially, a practice common in Sh.: 'chiefly generous.' I would more willingly read, 'Select and generous, are most choice in that,' RITSON (Remarks, &c. p. 193): The nobility of France are select and generous above all other nations, and chiefly in the point of apparel; the richness and elegance of their dress. MALONE: May we suppose that 'chief' of the Ff is a word borrowed from heraldry? They in France approve themselves to be of a most select and generous escutcheon by their dress. Chief, in heraldry, is the upper third part of the shield. See Minshew. This is very harsh; yet I hardly think that the words 'of a' could have been introduced without some authority from the MS. 'Generous' = generous. 'Chief,' however, may have been used as a substantive, for note or estimation. KNIGHT: It is scarcely necessary to go to heraldry for an explanation of the word: we have it in composition, as in mischief, and the now obsolete bonchief. 'Chief,' literally the head, here signifies eminence, superiority. Those of the best rank and station are of a most select and generous superiority in the indication of their dignity by their apparel. COLLIER (ed. i):
The meaning perhaps is: 'Are of a most select and generous rank and station, chiefla in that.' Dyce, in his Remarks, &c. p. 206, while approving of Collier's rendering of 'chief in that' ('the words can be used here in no other sense than chiefla in that), objects to the violent ellipsis which is implied by inserting 'rank and station' after 'select and generous,' and adds: 'During the many hours which I have spent (perhaps wasted) in collating early dramas, I have known four or five editions of a play, though differing from each other materially elsewhere, yet coincide in some one most erroneous reading (which was corrected by a fortunately extend MS); the text of that particular place having been once vitiated, the corruption had been retained in all the subsequent impressions. Such is evidently the case here (where there is unluckily no MS Hamlet to refer to); and the probability seems to be, that the strangely impertinent words, "of a," found their way into the line, while the eye of the transcriptor or compositor, glancing away from it for a moment, was arrested by "of the" immediately above.' COLLIER (ed. ii): 'Choice' was formerly not unfrequently spelt choice, and the long / led to the misprinting of 'choice,' first, chief, and afterwards chief. The (MS) substitutes 'choice,' and the whole difficulty is removed, for Polonius says that the French are 'of a most select Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
For loan oft loses both itself and friend, and generous choice’ in all matters relating to dress. WHITE [see this line and the next above it in Q4, Appendix, p. 47. Ed.]: Here [in Q4] I believe that we have not only the obvious misprint of ‘generall’ for ‘generous,’ and the interpolation of ‘of a,’ which all editors have supposed, but the accidental repetition in the second line of ‘chief’ in the first,—a kind of misprint which often occurs in the old texts of these plays. The two errors last named were perpetuated (as errors sometimes unaccountably are), although ‘chief’ in the first line was changed to ‘best.’ This reading of White’s the CAMBRIDGE EDITORS (Preface, viii) approve of as ‘probably’ what Sh. had ‘originally written;’ the corruption in Q4 and Q5 which, they say, is clearly due to an error in the transcript from which both were copied, may have arisen from Shakespeare’s having ‘given between the lines, or in the margin, “of,” “chief,” meaning these as alternative readings for “in” and “best” in line 73. The transcriber by mistake inserted them in line 74. STAUNTON: The slight change of sheaf for ‘cheif” or ‘cheff,’ a change for which we alone are answerable, seems to impart a better and more poetic meaning to the passage than any variation yet suggested; and it is supported, if not established, by the following extracts from Ben Jonson: ‘—Ay, and with assurance, That it is found in noblemen and gentlemen Of the best sheaf.—The Magnetic Lady, III, iv. ‘I am so haunted at the court and at my lodging with your refined choice spirits, that it makes me clean of another garb, another sheaf.—Every Man Out of His Humour, II, i. Ingleby (N. & Qu. 13 Sept. 1856) strongly upholds Staunton’s sheaf in the sense of a cique, class, or set in fashionable society. ‘And for this meaning we must have recourse to Euphuism. If sheaf be Shakespeare’s word, it is not the only instance of Euphuism in Polonius’s speech. In line 65, courage of the Q4 is Euphuistic for a gallant. It is so used by Scott in The Monastery, and is put into the mouth of that prince of Euphuists, Sir Piercie Shawton. Archers spoke of ‘arrows of the first sheaf,’ and the Euphuists appropriated the metaphor, and called their friends “gentlemen of the first sheaf.” Every archer of this day has his bat set (a set=12 arrows); and every archer of Shakespeare’s day had his first sheaf (a sheaf=24 arrows). Thus: “In my time, it was the usual practice for soldiers to choose their first sheaf of arrows, and cut those shorter which they found too long,” &c.—Discourse on Weapons.” Ingleby then cites the passages from Ben Jonson afterwards cited by Staunton, and concludes his note with the expression of his belief that the metaphor in the present case, as well as in Every Man Out of His Humour, was taken, not wholly from archery, but from husbandry. H. C. K. (N. & Qu. 11 Oct. 1856) upholds the Ff, and explains cheff as a measure by which, according to Skinner, cloth and fine linen were sold. TSCHICHTWITZ thinks that the uniformity of the QqFf in the reading ‘of a’ is an insuperable objection to any change or omission in that direction. The only suspicious words in the line are ‘in that’ at the end of it, because, as he says, we should rather expect them to be written ‘therein.’ ‘In that’ he believes to be the beginning of another line, of which the conclusion is lost, but which expressed in substance ‘In that they clothe themselves simply.’ Accordingly, in his text the line is: In that their show denies extravagance. Mo-

And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
This above all: to thine own self be true,
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.
Farewell; my blessing season this in thee!

_Laer._ Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.
_Pol._ The time invites you; go, your servants tend.

_Laer._ Farewell, Ophelia, and remember well
What I have said to you.

_Oph._ 'Tis in my memory lock'd,
And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

_Laer._ Farewell.

_Pol._ What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

_Oph._ So please you, something touching the Lord Hamlet.

BERLY follows Malone in interpreting 'chief' as the upper part of an heraldic shield.
KEIGHTLEY: A word even more appropriate than Steevens's 'choice' would have been taste.
J. BEALE (N. & Qu. 4 Sept. 1875) suggested chiefs.

77. _husbandry_ MALONE: Thrift, economical prudence. [See Macb. II, i, 4.]
79. _night_ WARBURTON, on the ground that the image presented in this simile should be one of cause and effect, substituted light for 'night.' It is needless to add that his reasoning has convinced no one up to this present. Ed.

81. _season_ JOHNSON: It is more than _infuse_, as Warburton interprets it; it is so to infix it that it may never wear out. CALDECOTT: Give a relish to, quicken, it; or it may be, keep it alive in your memory; as things preserved, and by spicery kept from a state of dissolution, are said to be _seasoned_. SINGER: 'To season . . . to temper wiselie, to make more pleasant and acceptable.—Baret, Alvearie. ELZE: It means rather to ripen. MOBERLY: Make these thoughts familiar to you. HUDSON: Used, apparently, in the sense of _intrain_; the idea being that of _so steeping_ the counsel into his mind that it will not fade out.

83. _invites_ THEOBALD preferred _invests_, supposing the term was military, and that it meant 'besieges, presses upon you on every side.'

89. _be_ CALDECOTT: Thence it shall not be dismissed till you think it needless to retain it.

_89. So_ In conditional sentences, according to MATZNER, iii, 458, _so_ is used instead of _if_ chiefly where the condition is of a restrictive nature, and expresses a reservation, like (but not always) the Lat. _modo, dum, dummodo_.

_89. the_ For unemphatic monosyllables in emphatic places and accented, see
Pol. Marry, well bethought;
'Tis told me, he hath very oft of late Given private time to you, and you yourself
Have of your audience been most free and bounteous;
If it be so—as so 'tis put on me,
And that in way of caution—I must tell you,
You do not understand yourself so clearly
As it behoves my daughter and your honour.
What is between you? give me up the truth.
Oph. He hath, my lord, of late made many tenders
Of his affection to me.
Pol. Affection! pooh! you speak like a green girl, Unsifted in such perilous circumstance.
Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?
Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.
Pol. Marry, I'll teach you; think yourself a baby,
That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay,
Which are not sterling. Tender yourself more dearly;

ABBOTT, 4 457, where it is said that the seems to have been regarded as capable of more emphasis than with us.

92. private] CALDECOTT: Spent his time in private visits to you. DELIUS: The time which he had at his own disposal.

94. put] CALDECOTT: Suggested to, impressed on. CLARENDON: See Twelfth N. V, i, 70; Macb. IV, iii, 239; Meas. for Meas. IV, ii, 120. [Ham. V, ii, 370.] 100. Affection—tenders] NARES: Inexperienced, unskilful, still found in green-horn, thus also ‘greenly,’ in IV, v, 79.

106. tenders] MOBERLY: In the Dutch war of 1674, Pepys tells us that many English seamen fought on the enemy's side, and were heard during an action to cry, 'Dollars now; no tickets,' the latter being the only pay they had received in their own service. This seems to explain the opposition here between 'tenders' and 'true pay.'

107. tender yourself] MALONE: Regard with affection. CALDECOTT: This was 'anciently used as much in the sense of regard or respect, as it was in that of offer. 'And because eche like thing tendreth his like.'—Preface to Drant's Horace, 1566.

109. Running] This emendation, which is Collier's conj., afterwards corroborated by his (MS), Dyce said he had long been convinced of. White calls it 'almost obvious,' and Clarendon adopts it as more in accordance with the figure in the preceding line. Pope's emendation Johnson supported, believing that wronging had reference not to the phrase, but to Ophelia, the 'it' being the redundant 'it' common enough in poetry, as in Pope's, 'To sinner it or saint it.' Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 25) conjectured ranging, i.e. you, behaving yourself with so much carelessness and liberty, will bring me into contempt, &c. Heath referred wronging to the 'poor phrase,' for 'whoever cracks the wind of anything may surely be said with propriety to wring or abuse it.' Warburton preferred wronging, i. e. not farther to crack the wind of the phrase by twisting or contorting it. Caldecott paraphrases the it by: 'ranging so far, becoming so wildly excessive, and running into so many senses of the word tender.' Badham (Cam. Essays, 1856, p. 283): Perhaps some readers will think with me that wrong is a corruption of worrying. The same description of persons will probably read in line 118 'extinct in birth' instead of 'extinct in both.' Keightley: 'To wrong it thus' is most probably correct. We might read,—supposing the allusion to be to a horse,—To run, as in, You run this humour out of breath, Com. of Err. I, i. Corson: The Ff are probably right; Polonius has reference to his varying application of the word 'tender.'

115. woodcocks] Nares: Proverbial for a simpleton; probably from the ease with which woodcocks suffer themselves to be caught in springes or snares. The phrase here means 'arts to entrap simplicity.' Clarendon: Compare Gosson, Apologist for the Schoole of Abuse, p. 72 (ed. Arber): 'When Comedie comes upon the Stage, Cupide sets vpp a Springe for Woodcockes, which are entangled ere they descrie the line, and caught before they mistruste the snare.' Harding (p. 239): The woodcock for some unaccountable reason was supposed to have no brains, and the name of this bird became a synonym for a fool.

117. Malone and White believe that some epithet to 'blazes' has been omitted. Coleridge (p. 153): A spondee has, I doubt not, dropped out of the text. Either insert Go to after 'vows,' or read, 'these blazes, daughter, mark you.' Sh. never introduces a caesura without intending an equivalent to the foot omitted in the pauses, or the dwelling emphasis, or the diffused retardation. I do not, however, deny that a good actor might by employing the last-mentioned means, namely, the retardation or solemn knowing drawl, supply the missing spondee with good effect. But I do not believe that in this or any other of the foregoing speeches of Polonius, Sh. meant to bring out the senility or weakness of that personage's mind. In the great ever-recurring dangers and duties of life, where to distinguish the fit objects for the application of the maxims collected by the experience of a long life requires no fineness of tact; as in the admonitions to his son and daughter, Pol. is uniformly made respectable. But if an actor were even capable of catching these shades in the character, the pit and the gallery would be malcontent at their exhibition. It is to Hamlet that Pol. is, and is meant to be, contemptible, because in inwardness and uncontrollable activity of movement, Hamlet's mind is the logical contrary to that of Pol. and besides Ham. dislikes the man as false to his true allegiance in the matter of the succession to the crown. Walker (Vers. p. 206) gives ten or twelve instances from Sh. and other dramatists, among them the present passage, in proof of his assertion that 'daughter' is sometimes a trisyllable. 'It is observable,' he adds, 'that in almost all these instances there is a pause—in at least half of them a full stop—after daughter.' What was the original form of the word? Compare ðryánga. In Chaucer, as far as I am acquainted with him, it is uniformly a dissyllable. In a foot-note Lettsom asks: 'Quere, when did the guttural become mute in this word? When pronounced, it would have facilitated a trisyllabic pronunciation.' Möerly adopts one of Coleridge's suggestions, and thinks that the strong irony on the word 'vows,' which is spoken with a laugh of contempt, makes it occupy the time of three syllables.

118. both] See Badham in note on line 109

119. a-making] White: There is no purer or more logically correct English than the idiom a-making, a-doing, a-building, &c. Ben Jonson says in his Grammar, ii, cap. 3: 'Before the participles present a and an have the force of a gerund,— "There is some great tempest a-brewing against us."' For instances of the prefix a before adjectives and participles used as nouns, see Abbott, § 24 (2); also I, v, 19; Macb. V, v, 49.

120. Corson upholds the Ff. 'It may be that "For this" = For[k] this, the th of Forth being absorbed. The verse of the Ff scans better than that of the Q3; in the latter "fire" must be made disyllabic, and "From" a heavy syllable. It will

126. few] For adjectives used as nouns, even in the singular, see Abbott, § 5. See also 'the general,' II, ii, 416.
127. brokers] Malone: This meant, in old English, a bawd or a procurer. [See Cotgrave: Maguignnon, To play the Broker, also to play the bawd. Ed.]
128. dye] Caldecott, Knight, Wood, Corson, follow the Ff. The first thus paraphrases: 'Of the cast, or character, that character of purity, which their garb, or assumed expression of passion, bespeaks.' Knight addsuce, Temp. ii, i, 55, 'eye of green,' to show that an eye was used to express a slight tint. Dyce asks if our early writers ever use 'eye' by itself to denote colour? White cites, as an instance in the affirmative, from 'the old translations of the Bible': 'And the eye of manna was as the eye of bdellium.'—Numbers xi, 7; later translations substituting 'colour' for 'eye.' Staunton thinks 'eye' may possibly be right. Morely: Not of the real stamp which their vesture seems to show.
130. bawds] Theobald: What idea can we form of a 'breathing bond,' or of its being sanctified or pious. As amorous vows have just been called 'brokers,' and 'implorers of unholy suits,' the plain and natural sense suggests an easy emendation: bawds. And this correction is strengthened by the concluding phrase, 'the better to beguile.' Mason (p. 376): Pol. has called Hamlet's vows 'brokers' but two lines before, a word synonymous to bawds, and the very title that Sh. gives to Pandarun; ‘implorators of unholy suits’ is an exact description of a bawd. All such of them as are crafty in their trade put on the appearance of sanctity, and are ‘not of that dye that their investments shew.’ Collier’s (MS) also substitutes ‘bawds.’ Singer pronounces bonds nonsense. White says that the context does not leave a question as to the propriety of Theobald’s emendation,—‘bawds” having probably been spelled bawds.” On the other hand, the advocates of the Ff are as follows: Warburton, after sneering at Theobald, paraphrases: Do not believe Hamlet’s amorous vows made to you; which pretend religion in them (the better to beguile), like those sanctified and pious vows (or bonds) made to heaven. Heath pronounces the sense of bonds unexceptionable, and interprets thus: Vows, uttered in the semblance of sanctified and pious engagements, such as have marriage for their object. Malone follows Heath, and affirms that by bonds were meant the bonds of love. Seymour (ii, 155): ‘His vows are implorators breathing like bonds (i.e. similar bonds, or sanctified vows) to those which are breathed by implorators of unholy suits.’ Caldecott: Like the protestations of solemn contracts entered into with all the formalities and ceremonies of religion. [Dyce (ed. i) pronounces this note of Caldecott’s ‘quite as silly as Malone’s.’] Staunton: ‘At one time we were strenuously in favour of Theobald’s alteration; we are now persuaded the Ff are right.’ Clarke: We cannot help believing bonds to be right, because Sh. uses the word elsewhere to signify ‘pledged vows,’ ‘plighted assurances of faith and troth;’ see Mer. of Ven. ii, vi, 6; Tro. & Cress. V, ii., 156. Keightley (Expositor, p. 287): The whole passage is merely a poetical periphrasis of seduction under promise of marriage; and had the word been Sounding, not ‘Breathing,’ there would probably have been no mistake. Corson: Bonds makes good sense. The general term, bonds, suggested, no doubt, by ‘brokers,’ is used for the more special term, ‘vows.’ ‘Breathing’ refers back to ‘they,’ standing for ‘vows;’ bonds, involving the idea of ‘vows,’ should not receive the stress, in reading, which should be given to ‘pious.’ Morley: Like law papers headed with religious formule. So policies of insurance begin, even at the present day, with the words, ‘In the name of God, Amen.’ Shakespeare’s bankrupt family had sad experience of such documents.

133. slander] Johnson: I would not have you so disgrace your most idle moments, &c. Morley: The meaning is, ‘Do not misuse any moment of leisure;’ as, conversely, you have ‘misused our sex,’ means ‘you have slandered it.’—As You Like it, IV, ii, 205.

133. moment’s] Dyce (Remarks, p. 209): It is absolutely necessary to print ‘moment’s.’ Would Shakespeare have employed such a ridiculous inversion when ‘leisure moment’ suited the metre as well? Abbott, §§ 22, 430, however, adopts ‘moment-leisure,’ and gives it as one of many instances of noun-compounds where the first noun may be treated as a genitive used adjectively. See II, ii, 464; III, i, 156. Clarendon: In the reading of the Ff, ‘moment’ must be taken as an adjec-

SCENE IV. The platform.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, and Marcellus.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

SCENE IV. Coleridge: The unimportant conversation with which this scene opens is a proof of Shakespeare's minute knowledge of human nature. It is a well-established fact, that, on the brink of any serious enterprise, or event of moment, men almost invariably endeavor to elude the pressure of their own thoughts by turning aside to trivial objects and familiar circumstances; thus the dialogue on the platform begins with remarks on the coldness of the air, and inquiries obliquely connected, indeed, with the expected hour of the visitation, but thrown out in a seeming vacuity of topics, as to the striking of the clock, and so forth. The same desire to escape from the impending thought is carried on in Hamlet's account of, and moralising on, the Danish custom of wassailing; he runs off from the particular to the universal, and in his repugnance to personal and individual concerns, escapes, as it were, from himself in generalisations, and smothers the impatience and uneasy feelings of the moment in abstract reasoning. Besides this, another purpose is answered;—for by thus entangling the attention of the audience in the nice distinctions and parenthetical sentences of this speech of Hamlet's, Sh. takes them completely by surprise on the appearance of the Ghost, which comes upon them in all the suddenness of its visionary character. Indeed, no modern writer would have dared, like Sh., to have preceded this last visitation by two distinct appearances,—or could have contrived that the third should rise upon the former two in impressiveness and solemnity of interest. But in addition to all the other excellences of Hamlet’s speech concerning the wassail-music,—so finely revealing the predominant Idealism, the ratiocinative meditative of his character,—it has the advantage of giving nature and probability to the impassioned continuity of the speech instantly directed to the Ghost. The momentum had been given to his mental activity; the full current of the thoughts and words had set in, and the very forgetfulness, in the fervor of his argumentation, of the purpose for which he was there, aided in preventing the appearance from benumbing the mind. Consequently, it acted as a new impulse,—a sudden stroke which increased the velocity of the body already in motion, whilst it altered the direction. The co-presence of Hor., Mar., and Ber. is most judiciously contrived; for it renders the courage of Ham., and his impetuous eloquence, perfectly intelligible. The knowledge,—the unthought-of consciousness,—the sensation,—of human auditors,—of flesh and blood sympathists,—acts as a support and a stimulation a tergo, while the front of the mind, the whole consciousness of the speaker, is filled, yea, absorbed, by the apparition. Add, too, that the apparition itself has by its previous appearances been brought nearer to a thing of this world. This accrescence of objectivity in a Ghost, that yet retains all its ghostly attributes and fearful subjectivity, is truly wonderful.

1. it is] DYCE (Remarks, &c. p. 209): The reading of F, would greatly favour the opinion of those critics who contend that the madness of Ham. was real, not assumed; no man in his sound senses, just after remarking that the air bites shrewdly, would inquire if it were very cold. WHITE: The reading of the F, is not entirely unworthy of consideration, because Shakespeare's purpose might well have been to suggest that state of the atmosphere between midnight and sunrise when the air bites shrewdly, although it is not very cold. Horatio's reply is not that it is cold, but that the air has this quality. However, that the Qq are right is shown in the first scene.

speaking of the burning of the Globe Theatre in 1613, tells us that the calamity was caused by the discharge of 'two poor chambers.'

8. _wake_ Dyce (Gloes.) : To hold a late revel. So, in poets of a much earlier date, we find the words watch and watching employed as equivalent to 'debauch at night.'

8. _rouse_ Gifford (The Duke of Milan.—Massinger, vol. i, p. 237, ed. 1605) : A 'rouse' was a large glass ('not past a pint,' as Iago says) in which a health was given, the drinking of which by the rest of the company formed a carouse. Barnaby Rich is exceedingly angry with the inventor of the custom, which, however, with a laudable zeal for the honour of his country, he attributes to an Englishman, who, it seems, 'had his brains beat out with a pottepot' for his ingenuity. There could be no _rouse or carouse_ unless the glasses were emptied. In process of time both these words were used in a laxer sense. They are used in their primal and appropriate signification in 'I've ta'en, since supper, A _rouse or two too much,' &c.—Knight of Malta. This proves Johnson and Steevens are wrong: a _rouse_ has here a fixed and determinate sense. As we should now say, 'a bumper or two too much.'

[See I, ii, 127.]

9. _wassail_ Festivity, a drinking-bout. See Mach. I, vii, 64.

9. _up-spring_ Four explanations have been proposed. First: Pope (followed by Hanmer) referred it to the King, and changed it into _upstart_; Johnson retained 'up-spring;' but adopted in a paraphrase Pope's emendation, 'a blustering upstart.' Nares adds the definition: 'one insolent from sudden elevation.' Singer also prefers this interpretation. Second: Steevens started the correct explanation when he showed by the following passage from Chapman's _Alphonsus_, that the 'up-spring' was a German dance: 'We Germans have no changes in our dances, An Almain and an upspring, that is all.' Elze confirmed it when, in his edition of Chapman's _Alphonsus_ [p. 144], he showed that this 'up-spring' was the "Hüpfaufl," the last and consequently the wildest dance at the old German merry-makings. See Ayres's _Dramen_, ed. by Keller, i, 2840 and 2846: 'Ey, jist geht erst der hüpfaufl an. Ey, Herr, jist kummt erst der hüpfaufl.' No epithet could therefore be more appropriate to this drunken dance than Shakespeare's 'swagging.' I need hardly add that 'up-spring' is an almost literal translation of the German name. Staunton, while assuming that 'up-spring' refers to a dance, understands 'reels' as a plural noun, qualified by 'up-spring.' [I have always supposed it to be a verb, in the same construction as 'keeps.' Ed.] Third: Steevens, in his note on 'rouse,' having quoted from Decker's _Girl's Hornbook_: 'Teach me, thou soveraigne skinner, how to take the German's upsye freeze, the Danish rousa,' &c., Caldecott inferred that the 'up-spring' dance might be like the 'upsye freeze,' both connected with the music and riot of a German deubauch. Badham (Cambridge Essays, 1856, p. 283) went
And as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down, a step farther, and would substitute for ‘up-spring’ in the present line, upsy freese.

‘Not that I know,’ he adds, ‘what upsy freese is, or whence it is derived,’ but from Steevens’s citation ‘it is evident that it was a species of drinking.’ ‘Up-spring,’ he says, ‘cannot be a dance (as if the descendants of the Berserker would interpolate their serious drinking with such a frivolous thing as a dance!), nor can it mean upstart—i.e. Hamlet’s uncle (a likely epithet to be uttered before two persons, and that when he has not yet seen the Ghost, and has no other feeling towards his uncle but one of vague aversion!).’ Fourth: _Keightley (Expositor, p. 288)_ says that it is ‘used collectively for the risers from the table, a mode of expression not yet obsolete.’

11. _kettle-drum_ _Douce_ (ii, 205): Thus Cleaveland in his _Fusca, or the Bee Errant_: ‘Tuning his draughts with drowsie hums As Danes carowse by kettle-drums.’

12. _triumph_ _Caldecott_: This may be the victory consequent upon the acceptance of the challenge to this ‘heavy-headed revel,’ or it may be only its pageant and scenic display. _Delius_: It is here the bitterest irony.

12. _custom_ _Caldecott_: The royal custom in Denmark near the date of this play may be seen in Howell’s _Letters_: ‘The King [Christian IV., who reigned from 1588 to 1649] feasted my Lord once, and it lasted from eleven of the clock till towards evening; during which time the King began thirty-five healths. . . . The King was taken away at last in his chair.’ [Caldecott cites several other authorities to the same effect.] _Hunter_ (ii, 221): The English, in the Tudor reigns, appear to have been a remarkably sober people, and the introduction of the vice of drunkenness is attributed by contemporary writers to the connection with the Netherlands.

14. 15. _native . . . manner born_ _Rushton (Sh. Illustr. by Old Authors, i, 47)_:
In the manumission by Henry VIII of two villeins the following words are used:
‘We think it pious and meritorious with God to manumit Henry Knight, a taylor, and John Herle, a husbandman, our natives, as being born within the manor of Stoke Clymmysland.’—_Barr. Stats. 276._ Hamlet, therefore, may speak of Denmark, or Elsinore as the manor, himself as _nativus_, to the manor born, and the ‘heavy-headed revel’ as a custom incident to the manor. ‘Manor’ is here used, probably, in a double sense, as in _Love’s Lab._ 1, i, 208, where it is contrasted with _manner_. It is of little importance whether the word be spelt _manner_ or _manor_, the mention of one would suggest the other, which is _idem somans_, but different in meaning.
More honour'd in the breach than the observance.

16. Dyce (Remarks, p. 210): I once heard an eminent poet maintain that this line, though it has passed into a sort of proverbial expression, is essentially nonsense: ‘how,’ said he, ‘can a custom be honoured in the breach?’ Compare the following line of a play attributed to Jonson, Fletcher, and Middleton: ‘He keeps his promise best that breaks with hell.’—The Widow, III, ii. Mitford (Gent. Maga. Feb. 1845): The meaning is: ‘It is a custom that will more honour those that break it than those who observe it;’ ‘honoured’ is put for honourable, and transferred to the subject. Hunter (ii, 221): We may regard Sh. as again making an effort, like that in Oth. II, iii, 79 (and efforts by a genius such as his are not lost), to free his countrymen from so baneful a vice.
17. east and west] Johnson: That is, ‘makes us traduced east and west of other nations.’ [Not as Warburton says, ‘this revel from morn till night.’]
17–38. As these lines are not in Q, Malone supposes that they were omitted out of deference to Anne of Denmark, the queen of James I. Knight, on the other hand, ingeniously conjectures that they were added in Q_{4} in order to qualify the harsh description of royal riot in lines 8–12. A trait of Shakespeare’s character may be herein indicated: he would not suppress lines offensive to royalty, because the description given in them was true; he only made it less severe by adding a tolerant exposition of the mode in which one ill quality destroys the lustre of many good ones. After the queen’s death the passage was omitted in the Ff. Elze believes that they were erased by Sh., but restored by the printer of Q, in order to justify his title-page, wherein it was stated that the play was ‘enlarged to as much again as it was,’ and is inclined to believe them spurious.

any complexion is too predominant.’ But he did not repeat it in his edition. SILBERNSCHLAC (Morgenblatt, No. 47, 1860, p. 1109) adduces this passage as one of the proofs that King James is designated under the character of Hamlet, and that the ‘vicious mole of nature’ referred to James’s aversion to the sight of a drawn dagger, which was supposed to be derived from the shock his mother experienced, before his

I have ventured to conjecture: 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance of worth out To his own scandal.' The dram of base, i. e. the least alloy of baseness or vice. Sh. frequently uses the adjective of quality instead of the substantive of the thing. Elsewhere speaking of worth, Sh. delights to consider it as a Quality that adds Weight to a person. See All's Well, III, iv, 31, and * From whose so many weights of baseness cannot A dram of worth be drawn.'—Cym. III, v, 88. HEATH: I [36. 'The dram of cale,' &c.] should rather suspect Sh. might have written 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft eat out,' &c. But granting a little farther departure from the printed text, I should think it still more probable that the true reading is: 'Doth all the noble substance soil with doubt,' That is: A dram of base alloy stains all the noble substance of his virtues with the suspicion that they are mere tinsel appearances only, and not of the true sterling standard. Capell (Notes, &c. i, 126), after citing Heath with approval, adds, 'But it should seem, from the comment that the same author makes upon his second amendment, that the line stands in need of a substantive, following 'of' to perfect the sense of it. And this, in truth, is the light in which the editor has view'd the corruption all along; that some word was slipt out of the copy, and 'out' changed to 'a doubt' by the printer's ingeniousness: the vacancy cannot be fill'd better than by the word in possession; and the line may be cur'd of it's baldness by no very great licence, the change of 'all' into eat; after which, the comment that has been given above [Heath's] is both a just and a perfect one. 'Which means that Capell would read the line 'Doth eat the noble substance of worth out.' In Capell's list of 'Various Readings of Hamlet' he cites the reading of Q, thus: of eale 4th. a. (f. ill.). This, I presume, indicates, what the Cam. Edd. ascribe to him, the conjecture of ill for 'cale.' Hereby Capell anticipated Jennens, who merely states that he ventures to read: 'The dram of ill Doth all the noble substance of good out, To his own scandal.' In the Var. of 1773, Steevens says: 'Mr Holt reads, The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft adopt, &c. I would read Doth all the noble substance (i.e. the sum of good qualities) oft do out.' 'To do a thing out is to efface, or obliterate anything in drawing.' Perhaps we should say, 'To its own scandal.' [Vide infra, Steevens, 1793.] Davies (Dramatic Misc. 1784, iii, 10): The very trifling alteration of adding a letter to one word, and the changing two letters for one in another, will restore to us the original reading, 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance oft work out,' &c. When I read this proposed emendation to the reverend and learned Mr Robertson, he not only concurred with me, but assured me he had himself made the same amendment. The apostle James hath a sentiment very similar to the present passage; 'For, whatsoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all.' [In the Var. 1785, S[tephen] W[eston] proposes the same emendation. Ed.] Mason (1785): I offer as an amendment (which is at least as near the old text as any yet proposed, and which is supported by line 35), 'Doth all the noble substance of 't corrupt.' Malone (1790): 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance of worth dout, To,' &c. To dout signified in Shakespeare's time, and yet signifies in Devonshire and other western counties, to do out, to efface, to extinguish. Thus they say, 'dout the candle, dout the fire,' &c., just as don signifies do on [or doff, do off—Steevens]. 'Dout' having been written by the transcriber doubt, and the word 'worth' having been inadvertently omitted, probably the line, in the copy for the press, stood: Doth all the noble substance of doubt. The editor or printer of the Q, finding the line too short, inserted the indefinite article, without attending to the context. Theobald's insertion of worth is fully justified by his citation from Cymbeline. [Malone, in Var. 1785, proposed 'By his own scandal;' but did not repeat it in his own edition. Ed.] Steevens [1793. Vide supra, Steevens, 1773]: I now think we should read: 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance often dout,' &c., for surely it is needless to say,—'the noble substance of worth dout,' because the idea of worth is comprehended...

in the epithet noble. N. B. This improvement I owed, about four years ago, to the late Rev. Henry Homer. Rann (1794?): 'Doth all, &c. oft corrupt: oft work out: eat out: By it's own scandal.' Martinus Scriblerus (Explanations and Emendations of Some Passages in the Text of Shakespeare, Edinburgh, 1814): I suppose there was a shifting of types from the upper to the lower line, and read thus: 'The dram of doubt Doth all the noble substance oft anneal To,' &c. That is, the dram of doubtful or base metal doth often, in the operation of annealing, cause the whole substance to become durably as base as itself. Whether this emendation will be made out by a comparison with the processes used in the arts, I know not, as everything connected with chemical science, or any branch of philosophy, appeared to me too insignificant to bestow upon it one moment's attention. Zachary Jackson says that he has endeavored to give the passage some sense, but cannot speak with that perfect confidence which he does in reference to 'most of my restorations.' Boswell (1821): A clear meaning is afforded by Holt's emendation, if we take 'substance' as a nominative: 'The noble substance doth oft bring disgrace upon itself by adopting the dram of base.' If this interpretation be rejected, I would prefer to suppose that doubt means to bring into doubt or suspicion, as to fear means to create fear; to pale is to make pale. Yet I prefer Holt's change. Caldecott merely enumerates, with approval, the various changes which preceding edd. have made, and which he adopts. [See Text. Notes. Singer (ed. i): 'The dram of bale Doth all the noble substance often doubt To,' &c. I see no reason why doubt should be substituted for doubt.' Boswell's interpretation of 'doubt' is just. I have ventured to read bale (i.e. evil) as nearer to the reading of the first edition. Stearns (Sh. Treat. p. 373) adopted this reading of Singer's, and explains it as a reference to the commerce in drugs, in which a great deal of adulteration is practiced; for the word bale we have now only the word alloy. Collier: It is easy to see how 'ill' might be misprinted false, and 'often dout' of a doubt; the compositor having taken the passage by his ear only: indeed, a stronger proof of the kind could hardly be pointed out. Delius: 'The dram of bale Doth all the noble substance off and out To,' &c. In the old edd. 'off' is constantly used for off, just as doubt for dout. In MS and out, run into one word, would be readily mistaken for a doubt, especially if an abbreviation were used instead of and. The sense is: The dram of evil doth off [i.e. puts off] and doth out [i.e. puts out] all the noble substance,' &c. A. E. B[rae] (N. & Qu. 21 Feb. 1852): Eafe and eale so nearly resemble each other, and the subsequent transition to base is so extremely obvious, and so consistent with the sense, that there can hardly be any plausible ground for the rejection of base in favour of ill. Moreover, base is the natural antithesis of 'noble' in the next line. Now, in what way does the dram (i.e. an indefinitely small quantity, as gram is used now-a-days) of base affect all the noble substance? Sh. says it renders it doubtful or suspicious. 'Doubt' in this place is not a verb, but a noun substantive. The chief hindrance now to a perfect meaning consists in the restriction of 'doth' to a mere expletive. Let this restriction be removed, by conferring upon 'doth' the value of an effective verb, and the difficulty disappears: thus, 'the base doth doubt to the noble,' i.e. imparts doubt to it, or renders it doubtful. We say a man's good actions do him credit; why not also, his bad ones do him doubt? There now remains 'off a' to be amended. I suggest offer; it is almost identical (in sound at least) with the original, and it materially assists in giving a much clearer applica-
The dram of eale, and its various uses.

The dram of eale, as a verb in the infinitive, is often used in the phrase 'doth offer,' which means offering something to someone. This usage is particularly common in the context of Shakespeare's play 'Hamlet.'

In the passage from 'Hamlet,' the character Hamlet is discussing the nature of the dram of eale, which is a measure of ale. He uses the phrase 'to the dram of eale' in a metaphorical sense to describe the nature of one's actions or speech.

The word 'dram' comes from the Old French word 'drame,' which means 'a draught' or 'a measure.' In Shakespeare's time, a dram was a unit of weight used to measure ale, which is a type of beer.

In the context of the passage, Hamlet is discussing the nature of one's actions or speech, and he uses the phrase 'to the dram of eale' to describe the nature of one's words or actions.

The dram of eale is a measure of ale, and in the context of Shakespeare's play, it is used to describe the nature of one's actions or speech. The phrase 'to the dram of eale' is a metaphorical way of describing someone's actions or speech.

print for derogate. First, they have the same number of letters. Secondly, they have the a, o, d, and t in common. Thirdly, derogate is the only verb that at the same time completes the sense and preserves the metre. Staunton: Ingleby's suggestion is ingenious, but may not the construction have been this: 'The dram of base (or ill, or base, or lead, or whatsoever word the compositor tortured into 'eale,' or 'ease') doth (i.e. doeth, worketh) all the noble substance of a pound to its own vileness?' We by no means pretend that pound was the actual word misrendered 'doubt'; it is inserted merely because it occurs in opposition to 'dram' in a line of Quarles's Emblems, b. ii, E 7,—'Where ev'ry dram of gold contains a pound of dross,'—and because it is extremely probable some such antithesis was intended here. So in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. i, c. iii, s. 30:—'A dram of sweete is worth a pound of sowre.' Swansea Jervis (Proposed Emendations, &c. 1860, p. 23): Read, The dram of evil Doth all the noble substance oft outdo, To, &c. Compare Cor. II, i, 150; 'So heavenly love shall outdo hellish hate.'—Par. Lott.; 'Wherein the graver had a strife With nature, to outdo the life.'—Jonson. In Chambers's Household Sk. is the following note: 'We have adopted "oft imbue" [for "of a doubt"], suggested by Mr Swansea Jervis, and thus supported:—Som. iii, 6; and All's Well, V, iii, 217.' Bailey (ii, 2): For 'eale' read evil; for 'of a doubt' read oft weigh down. 'Weigh, in some of the old copies of Hamlet, is spelt weigh.' Compare Rich. III: V, iii, 153; Timon V, i, 154. Corson (Jottings, &c. p. 13, 1874): All the difficulty of the passage is removed, I think, by understanding 'noble,' not as an adjective, as all the commentators have understood it, qualifying 'substance,' but as a noun opposed to 'eale,' and the object of 'substance,' a verb of which 'doubt' (which works) is its auxiliary. Thus: 'The dram of eale doth all the noble, substance of' (i.e. with, a sense common in the English of the time) 'a doubt (which works) to his own scandal.' Substance is used in the sense of imbue with a certain essence; 'his' is a neuter genitive, standing for 'noble,' and which. The dram of ill transsubstantiates the noble, essences it to its own scandal. (In regard to the uses of 'of' and 'to,' see Abbott, §§ 171, 186.) The use of 'substance,' in the sense of 'essence,' was, of course, sufficiently common, and had been for more than two centuries, to justify the interpretation given. In Macb. I, v, 48, we have 'sightless substances' = 'invisible essences,' 'sightless' being used objectively. Being of one substance with the Father.—Book of Common Prayer. Chaucer, in The Prologue of the Nomme Prestes Tale (l. 14809 of Tyrwhitt's edition, l. 16289 of Wright's), uses the word to express the essential character or nature of a man. The Host objects to the Monk's Tale, as being too dull for the occasion; and, that the fault may not be thought to lie in himself, says, 'And well I wot the substance is in me, If any thing schal wel reported be.' That is, I am so substantied, so constituted, so tempered, such is my cast of spirit, that I can appreciate and enjoy, as well as the next man, a good story well told. Whether 'substance' can be found, in this sense, as a verb, matters not. The free functional application of words which characterized the Elizabethan English, allowed, as every English scholar knows, of the use of any noun, adjective, or neuter verb, as an active verb. This interpretation I communicated in the main to N. & Qu. [4 Oct. 1862], but I did not then recognize an important element in it, that the pronoun 'his' is a neuter genitive, standing for 'noble' used as a noun. Arrowsmith (Shakespeare's Editors, &c. 1865, p. 6) thus quotes the passage: 'The dram of base Doth all the noble substance often draw To,' &c. HALLIWELL: This passage appears to be hopelessly corrupt, no emendation yet proposed being in the least degree satisfactory, nor have I any plausible suggestion of my own to offer. DYCE (ed. ii): The dram of evil Doth all the noble substance oft depose 'To &c. For this reading, now inserted in the text, I alone am answerable. CLARKE: That doubt and 'dout' were often printed the one for the other, and that the two words afforded scope for quibbling play upon them, is seen by the opening jest in A C. MERRY TALYS, 1567: 'I never harde tell of more doutes but twain, that is to say, dout the candell and dout the lyre.' H. D. (Athenæum, 18 Aug. 1866): Hamlet so emphatically insists that one little drop always corrupts the whole mass that he would not wind up by saying it often does so. Read, therefore, 'The dram of ill Doth...overdout.' ELIZ (Athenæum, 11 Aug. 1866) thinks a very near approach to the text, together with an unobjectionable sense, may be had by reading 'the dram of evil...often doubt To' &c. J. D. M. (Athenæum, 24 Nov. 1866): The sentence is simply incomplete. I would put a dash after 'scandal.' If completed, it might read 'To his own scandal taint.' KIGHTLEY (Expositor, 288): I read evil for 'eale,' and for of a doubt 'out o' doubt, or perhaps, 'out of a doubt.' The sentence, we may see, is not complete, and it should also be recollected that the language of the whole speech is involved, as if the speaker were thinking of something else, and merely talking against time. CARTWRIGHT (New Readings in Sh., &c. 1866, p. 37): For 'eale' read leaven, for of a doubt,' of a dough. PROWETT (N. & Qu. 25 Sept. 1869): Is it not possible that there was such a word as 'eale,' and that it was identical with the 'esel' in V, i, 264, meaning vinegar? In that case Sh. may perhaps have written 'Doth all the noble substance over-clout.' In the next scene, the possetting of the blood by poison is described like 'eager droppings into milk.' Thus Sh. here means that the small quantity of vinegar or other acid matter over-clouts, or curdles over, the whole of the substance to which it is added, so as to impart its own scandalous character to that substance. He has just used the word 'o'er-leavens.' Clout, to clot or curdle, is a well-known provincial expression. The unfamiliar word, clout, was mistaken by the eye for dout, and over, by the ear for of a.' THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE ON SHAKESPEARIAN GLOSSARIES IN THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (N. & Qu. 23 Oct. 1869): Evil is used by Elizabethan writers, and by Sh. himself, as a monosyllable, and it might, then, by a mistake of the ear, easily have been written as pronounced: eale. Again, the verb doubt is used not only in its literal sense of do out, but in the secondary meaning of obscure, eclipse, prevent the manifestation of, as by Laertes in IV, vii, 492. This secondary sense very much does away with the force of Lettsom's objection to doubt. Read, then, 'The dram of e'il Doth all the noble substance often doubt To' &c. W. M. ROSSETTI (N. & Qu. 30 Oct. 1869): Mapleton, in his Green Forest, 1567, says: 'The eil being killed and addressed in wine, whatsoever chaunceth to drink of that wine so used shall ever afterward loathe wine.' May not wine thus treated have been technically termed eel (eale)? Read, then: The dram of eel Doth,' &c., i.e. the dram of eel-dressing (vitiated wine) doth often doubt (bring into suspicion and disrepute) the noble substance (of pure wine) to the scandal of the said substance. On further reflection (N. & Qu. 4 Dec. 1869), a simpler meaning for 'the dram of eale' may be assigned, viz.: 'An extremely small weight, or quantity, even the sixteenth part of an ounce, of the eel-fish,' taking dram in its quantitative sense. J. WETHERILL (Athenæum, 20 Nov. 1869) suggests 'The dram of e'il Doth all the noble substance oft traduce To his own scandal, because Bacon, in his Ninth Essay, says that 'as infection spreadeth upon which is sound and tainteth it, so this evil eye traduceth even the best actions thereof, and turneth them into an ill odour.' Rushton (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 93, 1871): 'Dram of eale' may be a misprint, or abbreviation, of dram of hellebore, or 'ele-bore,' which old authors speak of as being very poisonous; Gosson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579, says: 'One dramme of Eleborus ransackes every vein.' Daniel (Notes, &c. 1870, p. 73): I propose—'the bram of meal Doth all the noble substance of it doubt: So this one scandal....' If the four mysterious letters, e a l e, may be formed by the addition of an m into the word meale (the old spelling of meal), the change of the preceding word, 'dram,' to 'bran' is obvious, and we have a sentence singularly in accordance with the argument of Hamlet's speech, which he illustrates by the homely simile of bran doubting or discrediting all the noble substance of the meal. If the bran of meal be accepted, the change of 'dram' to 'bran' hardly needs apology. In Soe, the S being next the T in the printer's 'case,' the error would be easily accounted for. His and this are so frequently confounded in the old copies, that no one would hesitate to correct where the sense of a passage required the change. The corruption of one into 'own' probably arose from the similarity in sound of the two words. The simile of Bran and meal seems to have been a favorite one with Elizabethan writers. Sh. uses it twice elsewhere, in Cym. IV, ii, 27; Cor. III, i, 322. Hudson (1870): 'The dram of vile Doth all the noble substance oft abate To, &c. I prefer vile as more likely to have been misprinted 'eale,' and I have ventured to change 'of' into oft, and 'a doubt' into abate, which was often used by old writers in the sense of cast down or depress. Perhaps attainant would give a slightly more congruous sense. Miles (Review of Hamlet, p. 16, 1870): 'The dram of ill Doth all the noble substance throw in doubt' seems to be the meaning of the line. Robert Roaster (Sunday Dispatch, Phila. 12 Jan. 1873): For 'often dout' read oft endow, the final t of 'dout' was inserted by the printer, misled by the occurrence of the letter at the beginning of the next line. Endow was often used in Shakespeare's time for endue, which is rendered by Bailey 'to supply,' 'to qualify.' The meaning then is The dram of base doth often qualify all the noble substance To its own scandal. Moberly: The passage must surely be read: 'The dram of ill Doth all the noble substance ever dout To,' &c. Hudson's forthcoming edition will read, 'The dram of leaven Doth all the noble substance of 'em sour'To,' &c., a reading suggested by a passage in Bacon's Henry the Seventh: 'And as a little leaven of new distaste doth commonly sour the whole lump of former merits, the King's wit,' &c. F. J. Furnivall suggests oft adote in place of 'of a doubt,' because adote meant both to grow silly and to drive silly. For the latter sense, see Gower's Confessio Amantis, III, ii, as quoted in Mätzner's Wörterbuch. 'The most wise ben otherwhile of love adoted,' i.e. made fools, besotted. John Davies (N. & Qu. 11 Mar. 1876) repeats Dyce's remark, that 'eale,' with 'the meaning of reproach, is still used in the western counties.'

Strachey (p. 44): Hamlet's generalizations are really drawn from the excessive brooding over his own character and circumstances, and only afterwards applied to the men and things about him. It is plainly he himself who is the original of this his description of the man in whom either nature or circumstances have unduly developed some one tendency of the character, to the injury of the proper and rational balance and harmony of the whole; and who, in consequence of this one defect, for which he is not responsible, and should rather be pitied than blamed, is may be.

39. In Davies’s Dram. Misc. (iii, 29) an account is given from Cibber of Betterton’s acting in this scene; Betterton was taught by Sir William Davenant, who had seen Taylor, one of the original performers of Hamlet [see V, ii, 274]: ‘He opened the scene with a pause of mute amazement; then, rising slowly to a solemn, trembling voice, he made the Ghost equally terrible to the spectator and himself; and, in the descriptive part of the natural emotions which the ghastly vision gave him, the boldness of his expostulation was still governed by decency; manly, but not braving; his voice never rising to that seeming outrage or wild defiance of what he naturally revered.’ Booth said: ‘When I acted the Ghost with Betterton, instead of my awing him, he terrified me. But divinity hung round that man.’ On the other hand, Macklin, after the first line, spoke the rest of the address calmly but respectfully, and with a firm tone of voice, as from one who had subdued his timidity and apprehension. Booth, says Davies, has never been surpassed in his acting of the Ghost; his slow, solemn, and undertone of voice, his noiseless tread, as if he had been composed of air, created a powerful impression. Hunter (ii, 222): ‘The idea of surprise predominates over the idea of apprehension. He did not mean that he needed protection in the presence of so gracious a figure, and the exclamation must be understood to escape him almost involuntarily. A pretty long pause should ensue after it is spoken, to allow him to recollect himself.’ A stage direction [Pause] is added after this line by Collier (ed. ii), with the note: This minute stage direction, showing the particular manner of the old actor of the character of Hamlet, ought to be preserved, and is from the (MS). It seems natural that the performer should ‘pause’ to recover breath after this exclamation, and before he tremulously proceeds to question the Ghost. We believe that the modern practice on our stage has been uniform in this respect,—possibly from the oldest tradition. [See Lichtenberg’s account of Garrick, in the Appendix. Ed.]

40. health] Clarendon: A healed or saved spirit.

42. intents] Nichols (i, 27) advocates ‘events’ of Ff, in the sense of ‘coming forth.’ ‘The Ghost had already appeared twice,—this was the third time of his coming forth.’ Corson: The reading of the Ff is better than that of the Qf. Events is equivalent to issues. The meaning is, not that Hamlet attributes any ‘intents’ to the Ghost, but that the Ghost’s appearance is to him prognostic of certain issues or events; ‘thy’ is the personal, and not the possessive, adjective pronoun; in other words, it is used objectively.
Thou comest in such a questionable shape
That I will speak to thee; I'll call thee Hamlet, King, Father; Royal Dane, O, answer me!
Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death
Have burst their cerements; why the sepulchre,

43. questionable Theobald: That is, to be conversed with, inviting question, as in Macb. I, iii, 43. Caldecott: 'So doubtful, that I will at least make inquiry to obtain a solution.'

45. Royal Dane] Pye (p. 312): The change of punctuation proposed in the following anonymous observation, published in the St. James's Chronicle, 15 Oct. 1761, is so convincing that I shall without hesitation adopt it: '[To put a colon after "Dane"] seems to be a strange climax (if not an anti-climax). But a slight alteration in the pointing will remove all objections, preserve the beauty of the climax, and perhaps give an additional force to the whole passage. Thus, "I'll call thee Hamlet, King, Father,—Royal Dane, O answer me." The climax naturally and beautifully ends with the endearing appellation of "Father." He then addresses the Ghost by the general appellation, "Royal Dane, O answer me."' This seems the criticism of no mean critic. [Mr Edwin Booth has informed me that his father always spoke the line thus, and that he himself has always so spoken it. I believe Mr Irving has also adopted it. To me it is unquestionably the true reading, and I have not hesitated to punctuate the text accordingly. Ed.]

46. canoniz'd] Warburton: Bones over which the rites of sepulture have been performed, or which were buried according to the canon. Blakeaway: The accent is on the second syllable. [See Walker, Vers. 197; Abbott, § 491.]

47-50. Johnson has a long note on these lines, called forth by Warburton's superfluous change of 'hearsed in earth,' and sums up the whole sentence in: 'Why dost thou appear, whom we know to be dead?' Heath (p. 531): By the expression hearsed in death is meant, shut up and secured with all those precautions which are usually practised in preparing dead bodies for sepulture, such as the winding-sheet, shroud, coffin, &c. So that death is here used, by a metonymy of the antecedent for the consequent, for the rites of death, such as are generally esteemed due, and practised with regard to dead bodies.

48. cerements] Clarendon: Q here reads 'ceremonies.' As this copy is probably derived from short-hand notes taken at the play, it would seem to show that 'cerements' was pronounced as a trisyllable. [Does it not rather show that 'ceremonies' was pronounced as a trisyllable; 'ceremonies?' and is it not an additional proof of what Staunton and Walker affirm in reference to the monosyllabic pronunciation of cere in ceremony, ceremonious, ceremonials? See Macb. III, iv, 36. En.] See Cotgrave: 'Cerat: A Plaister made of Waxe, Gummes, &c., and certaine oyles; wee also, call it, a Cerot or Searecloth.'
Wherein we saw thee quietly in-urn'd,
Hath oped his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again. What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisits thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature

49. in-urn'd] Dyce: In my Few Notes, &c., p. 137, I remarked: 'Perhaps the reading of the Q3 is preferable, because in-urn'd implies that the body had been reduced to ashes,'—a remark which I now wish to recall. Compare Cor. V, vi, 145, 146. CLARENDON: 'Urn' is used for 'grave' in Hen. V: i, ii, 228.

52. complete] Accented on the first syllable. See Walker, Vers. 292; Crit. ii, 21: ABBOTT, § 492. DOUCE: It is accented on the second syllable in King John, II, i, 433, 434.

52. steel] STEEVES: Probably Sh. introduced the Ghost in armour for the sake of greater solemnity; though it was really the custom of the Danish kings to be buried in that manner. Vide Olaus Wormius, cap. vii: '...postquam...rex collem sibi...extruxisset, cui post obitum regio diademate exornatum, armis indutum, inferendum esset cadaver.'

53. Revisits] Walker (Crit. ii, 128): 'Quare, in cases where it would produce extreme harshness, and where at the same time the old copies have s, whether we ought not to write the latter? [The text which I have adopted is my answer. ED.]

53. glimpses] Hunter (ii, 223): The scene is thus made more picturesque by introducing the moon sending forth her beams on the platform, either through interstices of dark clouds, or, what is more probable, through the openings among the battlements.

54. we] THEOBALD, CALDECOTT, and CLARENDON say that in strict grammar us should be here used; but Walker (Crit. i, 58) evidently, as LETTSOM notes, connects we fools with That, and so does MOREKLY in his excellent paraphrase: 'What may it mean that we with our blind nature (are made) so horribly to shake our composure of spirit with thoughts beyond the reach of our souls?' adding: 'This random connexion of the clause suits well with the headlong impetuosity of the speech.' On the same grammatical grounds Tschischwitz reads, 'So horribly do shake.' ABBOTT, § 216, thus explains 'and we': After a conjunction and before an infinitive we often find I, thou, &c., where in Latin we should have 'me,' 'te,' &c. The conjunction seems to be regarded as introducing a new sentence, instead of connecting one clause with another. Hence the pronoun is put in the nominative, and a verb is, perhaps, to be supplied from the context. So, too, we have we for us in III, ii, 231, since it stands quasi-independently at some distance from the governing word, 'touches.'

54. fools] WARBURTON: Intimating that we are only kept (as formerly fools in a great family) to make sport for nature, who lies hid only to mock and laugh at us for our vain searches into her mysteries. MASON (p. 378): A paraphrase of the

57. wherefore] See Walker, Vers. 111, for instances where the accent in this word is shifted at pleasure from one syllable to another; see Rom. & Jul. ii, ii.
62. Also Abbott, § 75, for the use of 'why.'

61. waives] Dyce: Although the Ff here and in line 78 have 'wafts,' but 'waives' in line 68, yet undoubtedly Sh. in these three places used the same form of the word; and as the Qq in all three places have 'waives,' they surely are to be followed. CLARENDON: Either word means 'beckon,' and both are used by Sh. So we have a double form of 'graff' and 'graft.'

61. removed] Cambridge Editors: Steevens says, 'F, reads remote.' We have not been able to find this reading in any copy of that edition which we have consulted. Sir Frederic Madden has kindly collated for us the four copies in the British Museum, all of which have 'removed.' This is also the reading of Capell's copy, of Malone's, and of two others to which we have had access, and it is the reading in Mr Booth's reprint. [It is also the reading in my copy of F; Ed.]

64. should] See Abbott, § 328, for instances of 'should' denoting a statement not made by the speaker, like sollen in German. CLARENDON refers to Macb. I, iii, 45, as a parallel instance, but Abbott, § 323, seems to interpret the use of 'should' in that line more correctly, and is so cited in the Var. ed.

73. deprive] JOHNSON: In this place it signifies simply to take away. So also Dyce interprets it in ' deprives our own sight.'—Beau. & Fl. The Maid in the Mill, IV, iii, 8. WALKER (Crit. iii, 261): That is, depose reason from her throne in your mind. 'Deprive' is here synonymous with depose. LETTSOM (Foot-note to the foregoing): I have observed two examples of this use of the word in R. of L. 1186 and 1752. Again, ' And join together to deprive my breath.'—Woman Kill'd with Kindness, Dodsley vii, p. 261; ' What son, what comfort that she (Fortune) can deprive? '—Marston, Antonius & Mellida, Part i, III, i. ABBOTT, § 200: 'De-privè, meaning to 'take away a thing from a person,' like 'rid,' can dispense with 'of' before the impersonal object. This explains the present passage: 'which might take away your controlling principle of reason.' Compare also the tendency (§ 290) to convert neuter verbs into active verbs. See also I, iii, 51.

73. sovereignty of reason] WARBURTON: The same as sovereign or supreme reason. Thus, 'At once to betray the sovereignty of reason in my soul.'—King Charles, 1sten Basilik. CAPELL (i, 126): Deprive you of the command of your reason, of that sovereignty which you now exercise over it. STEEVENS: The phrase does not signify, to deprive your princely mind of rational powers, but to take away from you the command of reason, by which man is governed. GIFFORD (Jonson's New Inn, p. 352, ed. 1816): 'Sovereignty' here is merely a title of respect, and the whole phrase means neither more nor less than to deprive your lordship, or your honour, or your highness, of reason. [Alicuando dormitut, &c. As HUNTER says, Hamlet was no sovereign. Ed.] CALDECOTT: Dispossess the sovereignty of your reason. So that he throws his image forcibly before his reader, Sh. leaves it to him to arrange his pronouns and articles, and grammatically thread his meaning. Compare 'nobility of love,' I, ii, 110. For instances where pronominal and other adjectives are placed before a whole compound noun instead of, as they strictly should be, before the second of the two nouns, see ABBOTT, § 423. So 'your cause of distemper,' III, ii, 321; 'His means of death,' i.e. 'the means of his death.'—IV, v, 207. 'My better part of man.'—Macb. V, viii, 18.

Stage Direction] Owing to the length of time that elapses before the companions of Ham. rejoin him, DELIUS thinks it unlikely that the dialogue with the Ghost took place on the same Platform where Ham. broke loose from his friends. Tschischwitz changes the scene to 'A Wilderness,' because 'Ham. must have followed the Ghost a long distance, since he refuses to go farther. His question also, "Whither wilt thou lead me?" shows that, despite his courage, horror is beginning to creep over him; and at the close of the scene the Ghost speaks from under the ground.' The earliest change in this stage direction that I can find is in SCHRÖDER'S adaptation of the play for the Hamburg theatre, in 1781. Here the scene is laid in 'A Graveyard with the Church in the background.'

fires] fire Cald.

6, 7. Speak... hear] DOUCE: These words are turned into ridicule in The Woman Hater, Beau. and Fl. vol. i, p. 37, ed. Dyce.

6. bound] DELIUS: Hamlet uses the word in the sense of ready addressed [past part. of Old Norse binn,—see Wedgwood], the Ghost uses it as the past participle of the verb to bind.

11. to fast in] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 45) conjectured that we should read roast, but afterwards in his correspondence with his ‘most affectionate friend,’ Warburton (see Nichols, Lit. Hist. vol. ii, p. 559), he said, ‘sed facti paniet,’ and suggested instead, confined fast; presumably he withdrew them both, since he does not allude to them in his ed., where he says: The expression is purely metaphorical, for fasting could be no great punishment for a Spirit. According to the Roman Catholic religion, fasting purifies the soul here, as the fire does in the Purgatory here alluded to; the soul must be purged either by fasting here or by burning hereafter. Heath and Johnson both conjectured to lasting, which the former considered justified by the next line, the meaning being: fires which were to last till the purgation was completed; and which the latter interpreted as unremitted and unconsumed. Collier’s (MS) has the same. SMITH [cited by Steevens]: Chaucer has a similar passage with regard to the punishments of hell, Persones Tale, p. 291, ed. Tyrwhitt, 4to: ‘And moreover the misese of helle shall be in defaute of mete and drink.’ STEEVENS: Nash, in $\text{Pierced Penntites his Supplication to the Devil}, 1595$, has the same idea: ‘Whether it be a place of horror, stench and darkness, where men see meat, but can get none, or are ever thirsty,’ &c. So likewise at the conclusion of an ancient pamphlet called The Wyll of the Detyll, bl. 1 no date: ‘Thou shalt lye in frost and fire With sinnkesse and hungre,’ &c. But for the foregoing examples, I should have supposed we ought to read, ‘to waste in fires.’ MASON: As spirits were supposed to feel the same desires and appetites that they had on earth,
Till the soul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purged away. But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my prison-house,
I could a tale unfold whose lightest word

To fast might be considered as one of the punishments inflicted on the wicked. Dyce
(ed. i): If the old text be wrong, and certainly the passages in Chaucer, &c., as given above, do not fully establish it, Steevens’s conj. of waste in is perhaps the most probable alteration yet proposed. [This remark about Steevens’s conj. is omitted in Dyce (ed. ii), and citations from Chaucer, &c. alone are given.] White:
These fires were those of Purgatory, in which the Ghost was confined for the day only, and so were not lasting in any sense. ‘Fast’ may be used here in its radical sense of religious observance, and without any allusion to abstinence from food, or there may be a reference to the old notion contained in the extract from Chaucer.
Tschischwitz: Lasting cannot be right, because the Ghost was in Purgatory, nor is to fast in any better, since the old king wanders about outside his ‘prison-house,’ and could, if he chose, satisfy his hunger. Clearly, the true opposite to ‘walk’ is what I have adopted in my text, ‘confined fast.’ [See Theobald supra. Ed.]

14. burnt and purged] Farmer: Thus Gawain Douglas, in his translation of Æn. vi, 740, says that ‘it is a nedeful thing to suffer panis and torment,... some in the wyndis, sum under the watter, and in the fire uthir sum. Till the mony vices Contrakkit in the corsis be done away And purgit.’

17, 18. Make... start... to] For the omission and insertion of ‘to’ in the same sentence, see Abbott, § 350, and I, v, 178.
19. an end] For instances of nouns, adjectives, and participles with the prefix a, see Abbott, § 24, where it is shown that a represents some preposition, as ‘in,’ ‘on,’
‘of,’ &c., contracted by rapidity of pronunciation, and takes an n before a vowel for euphony. See also § 182, and of this play, I, iii, 119; II, ii, 466; III, i, 165; III, iv, 122; and Macbeth, V, vi, 49. Eastwood and Wright (Bible Word-Book, p. 2):
This prefix a- or an- is generally said to be a corruption of the Anglo-Saxon particle on-, but more probably the two are essentially identical, and only different dialectical forms of the same. In many instances the two forms remain side by side, as in aboard and on-board, aground and on ground.
21. eternal] Walker (Crit. i, 62) proposes infernal, and cites it among instances
To ears of flesh and blood. List, list, O, list!
If thou didst ever thy dear father love—

Ham. O God!

Ghost. Revenge his soul and most unnatural murder.

Ham. Murder?

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is,
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know't, that I, with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;
And dullest shouldst thou be than the fat weed of 'an inaccurate use of words in Sh., some of them owing to his imperfect scholarship (imperfect, I say, for he was not an ignorant man, even on this point), and others common to him with his contemporaries.'

21. blazon] Caldecott: 'Such promulgation of the mysteries of eternity must not be made to beings of a day.' Wedgwood: 1. To blow abroad, to spread news, to publish. 2. To portray armorial bearings in their proper colours. Moberly: 'A blaze' is a white mark upon a horse; whence to blaze trees is to touch them with an axe, so as to mark the way back. To 'blazon,' therefore, means properly to mark out; hence 'to reveal.'

24. O God!] Seymour (ii, 159) considers this as an unnecessary interpolation of some actors; so also the Ghost's repetition of 'Murder' in line 27.

27. For this line Tschischwitz substitutes the two corresponding lines of Q.

30. meditation] Warburton: This word is consecrated by the mysticks to signify that flight of mind which aspires to the enjoyment of the supreme Good. So that the two most rapid things in nature are here employed: the ardency of divine and human passion in an enthusiast and a lover. Johnson: This is so ingenious that I hope it is just. Caldecott: That is, 'as the course and process of thought generally.' We have 'I'll make him fly swifter than meditation,' in the Prologue to Wily Beguiled. It was not improbably, therefore, a common saying.

31. sweep] Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 50) conjectured sweep, not only from the fitness of the word, but from its use in Macb. IV, iii, 219. He did not repeat the conj. in his edition.

32. shouldst] For instances of 'should' where we now use would, see Abbott, § 322, or Macb III, vi, 19.

stands, we must read it with a note of interrogation, and even then it is scarce passable.
Transpose the ‘shouldst’ and the ‘Wouldst’; ‘And duller wouldst thou be,’ &c.
This is pertinent and natural, and we find the Ghost speaks a little more to the purpose.
33. roots] CAPELL (i, 127): The moderns have sunk a great beauty by not following the Ff; for in ‘roots’ is an idea of action that diminishes the comparis-on’s beauty, which consists in inaction. STEEVENS (quoted by Dyce in his ed. i) paraphrases Capell, and adds: This dull root pluck’d from Lethe flood.’—The Humorous Lieutenant, IV, iii, Beau. & Fl. vol. vi, ed. Dyce. CALDECOTT: We have the phrase [‘rot’] again in Ant. & Cleo. I, iv, 47: ‘To rot itself with motion.’ KNIGHT: Whiter, in his Etymological Dict., speaking of this passage, in connection with the theory of ease belonging to the idea of being earthed—fixed, resting—says, ‘It is curious that Sh. uses ease as connected with a term which most strongly expresses the idea of being fixed in a certain spot, or earth.’ WHITE: The Qq are confirmed by the passage from Ant. & Cleo. If in the one case the flag roots itself with motion, it seems clear that in the other it must root itself with ease. The opposition of ‘roots’ to ‘stir’ in the next line also supports this reading. STAUNTON:
It is difficult to determine which expression deserves the preference.
33. Lethe] For instances of the conversion of one part of speech into another, especially in the case of rivers, see ABBOTT, § 22. [See ‘moment’s leisure,’ I, iii, 133.] For the omission of the article before the names of rivers, see KOCH, ii, §
169; MÄTZNER, iii, 158.
37. process] CLARENDON: This has here, perhaps, the sense of an official narrative, coming nearly to the meaning of the French proces verbal. By a proclamation, dated 18 Aug. 1553, it was forbidden, without licence, ‘to prynie any bookes, matter, ballet, ryme, interlude, processe, or treatise.’—The English Drama and Stage (Roxburgh Library), p. 17.
Now wears his crown.

_Ham._

O my prophetic soul!

My uncle?

_Ghost._ Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,—

O wicked wit and gifts, that have the power

So to seduce!—won to his shameful lust

The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen;

O Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!

From me, whose love was of that dignity

That it went hand in hand even with the vow

I made to her in marriage; and to decline

Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor

To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be moved,

Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven,
So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.
But, soft! methinks I scent the morning air;
Brief let me be. Sleeping within my orchard,
My custom always in the afternoon,
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial,

58. morning air] morning-air Kty.
59. within my orchard] in my Garden Q'76.

56. sate] Tschischwitz: The reading of Qq makes excellent sense, even without changing 'in' to from. 'Even in a celestial bed lust will separate, detach itself, &c.' Not only 'link'd,' but also 'prey,' shows sort to be the emphatic word. It is small wonder if German commentators prefer 'sate' to sort, but Englishmen, before whose vision the enormous breadth of their own almost square beds must have instantly arisen, ought to have conceived the right idea of separation in bed. Moreover, 'sate itself' cannot be connected with 'prey on garbage' on physiological grounds.

60. custom] Instances are given in the Var. '21 to show that an 'after-dinner sleep' (Meas. for Meas. III, i, 33) was in general customary.

60. in] Clarendon: A somewhat similar use of the preposition of, in the Qq, occurs in Love's Lab. L, i, 43. For the use of of, see Abbott, 8 176.

61. secure] Walker (Vers. 202): Accent on the first syllable, as in Oth. iv, i, 72, and as 'complete' in Ham. I, iv, 52. Staunton (Note on Lear, IV, i, 20): Careless, unguarded. Thus, in Sir T. More's Life of Edward V: 'When this lord was most afraid, he was most secure; and when he was secure, danger was over his head.' Again, Judges, viii, 11: 'And Gideon . . . smote the host: for the host was secure.'

62. hebenon] Grey (ii, 287): This stands, by metathesis, for henebon, that is, henbane, of which the most common kind (Hyoscyamus niger) is certainly narcotic, and perhaps if taken in a considerable quantity might prove poisonous. Pliny (Nat. Hist. lib. xxx, cap. 4) states that the oil made from the seeds of this plant, instilled into the ears, will injure the understanding. Steevens: So, in Drayton, Barons Wars, p. 51: 'The poa'ning henbane and the mandrake drad.' Again, in the
And in the porches of my ears did pour

Philosopher's Fourth Satire of Mars, by Anton, 1616: 'The poison'd henbane, whose cold juice doth kill.' The word is written differently in Marlowe's 'Jew of Malta (Works, p. 164, ed. Dyce): '—— the blood of Hydra, Lerna's bane, The juice of hebon, and Coctus' breath.' DOUCE: In the English edition by Batman on Bartholomaeus de Proprietatibus Rebus, the article for the wood henbony is entitled, 'Of Ebeno, cap. 52.' It is not surprising that the dropping into the ears should occur, because Sh. was perfectly well acquainted with the supposed properties of the henbane, as recorded in Holland's translation of Pliny, and elsewhere, and might apply this mode of use to any other poison. CALDECOTT: The medical professors of Shakespeare's day believed that poison might be introduced into the system through the ears; the eminent surgeon, Ambrose Paré, Shakespeare's contemporary, was suspected of having, when he dressed the ear of Francis II, infused poison into it. Dr Sherwen informs us that in Gower's Confessio Amantis theouch of the god of sleep was made 'Of Hebenus, that sleepie tree.' SINGER: The French word hebenin, applied to anything made from henbane, comes indeed very close to the hebenon of Sh. ELZE: If the citation from Marlowe be correct, it might be better to read the line: 'With juice of cursed henbon in a phial.' Or perhaps should we not conjecture that hemlock was intended here? BEISLEY (Sh.'s Garden, p. 4): 'Hebenon' might have been originally written eneron, one of the names at that time of Solanum manicatum, called also deadly nightshade, a more powerful poison than henbane. TSCHISCHWITZ: The hebena of the Qq can be only a mistaken substitution of the Spanish and Italian, ebano; French, ében; Latin, ebenus and hebenus. Probably the en of 'hebenon' was caused by the following 'in,' so that we may suppose that originally the word here was heben, the only correct etymological form, although it was sometimes incorrectly written hebon. MOBERLY: Not surely Ebony (Diospyros), the fruit of which is often edible; but henbane, or Hyoscyamus, which is a strong narcotic poison. It does not indeed produce any leprous symptoms; but the belief of its doing so would, on the theory of signatures, be founded on the clammy appearance of the plant.

69. eag] CLARENDON: Cotgrave gives: 'Aigre: Eagre, shapre, tart, biting, sourer.' EARL of ROCHESTER (1761, cited by C. E. BROWNE, Athenaeum, 3 April, 1875): The word eag is a substantive, and not an adjective: it being a general English name for acids of all kinds. Had the original words been 'eager droppings into milk,' alluding to the making of silliubs, the thought would have been inverted; for the milk does not curdle, but is curdled by the acid it is milked upon. Read, therefore, 'like eag, dropping into milk.'

75. dispatch'd ] WARBURTON: In the sense of bereft. DYCE (Few Notes, &c., p. 139): Despoil'd of Coll. (MS) conveys merely the idea of deprivation, while 'dispatch'd' expresses the suddenness of the bereavement. CLARENDON: Sh. would scarcely have used this word with 'crown' and 'queen' if he had not first used it with 'life.' The phrase 'dispatch of life' does not occur again; we have, however, 'dispatch his nighted life,' in Lear, IV, v, 12.

77. Unhouseled ] POPE: That is, without the sacrament being taken. THEOBALD: From the old Saxon word for the sacrament: husel. Spenser calls the sacramental fire the housling fire.

JOHNSON: 'Disappointed' is the same as unappointed, and may be properly explained unprepared; a man well furnished with things necessary for any enterprise is said to be well appointed. BOUCHER (Gloss. of Archaic and Provincial Words, s. v. ANYEAL) [cited by B. J. S. N. & Qu. 1 Jan. 1853]: A clear and consistent meaning consonant with Shakespeare's manner will be given to the passage if, instead of 'disappointed,' we substitute unassoiled, i.e. without absolu.

...tion. It must be allowed that no instance can be given of the word unassorted, but neither does any other instance occur to me of unhoused except here. HUNTER (ii, 224): Perhaps unassorted may have been the word, which is equivalent to unhoused.

77. unhallowed] POPE: No knell rung. THEOBALD: According to Skinner, Anecd. I is unctus, so that unhallowed must signify unanointed, not having the extreme unction. JENNENS: It can hardly be doubted that Sh. wrote here unanointed. To unoil was a phrase in common use, meaning to anoint. See James, v, 14, in the Rhemish Test. 1582, and the notes on the passage, which prove that anoil and anoint were words indifferently used at that time. TYRWHITT: 'So when hee was houesled and eneled, and had all that a christian man ought to have.'—Morte d'Arthur, vol. iii, p. 350 (ed. T. Wright). NARES: 'The extreme unction or anelynge, and confirmation, he sayd, be no sacraments of the church.'—Sir Thomas More's Works, p. 345. CALDECOTT: In the advertisement to his notes, Stephen Weston quotes Sophocles, Antigone, 1071: ἀμόρφον, ἀκτεραστὸν, ἀνόισον ἅρτεν, and adds, ἀμορφος, disappointed or unprovided, unportioned, unprepared with sacrifices for the infernal gods; ἀνοιστος, unhoused, without the sacrament or holy rites; ἀκτεραστος, unhallowed, without the holy oil or the honours of burial.

80. JOHNSON: It was ingeniously hinted to me by a very learned lady [probably Mrs Montagu]—Cam. Edd. that this line seems to belong to Hamlet, in whose mouth it is a proper and natural exclamation; and who, according to the practice of the stage, may be supposed to interrupt so long a speech. KNIGHT: It was always spoken by Garrick, in his character of Hamlet, as belonging to the Prince, according to stage tradition. COLLIER (ed. ii): The (MS), who was usually very attentive to such matters, made no change. WHITE, STAUNTON, and DYCE think it probable that this line should be given to Hamlet, but do not venture to change the text of all the old copies. KEIGHTLEY says, 'beyond question' it belongs to Hamlet. CLARKE thinks that it 'markedly belongs to the Ghost, if it were only on account of their triple iteration, which is so completely consistent with the previous threefold “List, list, oh, list!” and the subsequent solemn repetition of *“Swear!”’

80. Oh] CORSON: A distinction should be made between the emotional interjection, “Oh,” and the “O,” vocative. It can be seen, I think, that the distinction was intended in the Fl, although it is not invariable. But in a modernized text consistency requires that the distinction should be made, as it is one that is observed in modern orthography. It is a distinction, too, not merely factitious, as might be supposed, but based on good ground. 'There is a difference between “O sir!” “O King!” and “Oh! sir,” “Oh! Lord,” both in sense and pronunciation. As to the sense, the O prefixed merely imparts to the title a vocative effect; while the Oh conveys some particular sentiment. And as to the sound, the O is enclitic; that is to say, it has no accent of its own, but is pronounced with the word to which it is
If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.
But, howsoever thou pursuest this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive Against thy mother aught; leave her to heaven,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire;

attached, as if it were its unaccented first syllable. The term Enclitic signifies "reclining on," and so the interjection O in "O Lord" reclines on the support afforded to it by the accentual elevation of the word "Lord." So that "O Lord" is pronounced like such a disyllable as alight, alike, away; in which words the metrical stroke could never fall on the first syllable. Oh! on the contrary, is one of the fullest of monosyllables, and it would be hard to place it in a verse except with the stress upon it. Thus, in Wordsworth: "But she is in her grave,—and oh, The difference to me!"—Earle's Philology of the English Tongue, 2d ed. pp. 191, 192.

83. luxury] Dyce (Gloss.): Lasciviousness, its only sense in Sh.
89. matin] Elze: Drake in his Sh. and his Times, ii, 414, prints matins in his citation of this passage. The rare occurrence elsewhere of 'matin' is sufficient to arouse suspicion, and one is tempted to change it to matins here. Clarendon: We can find no other instance of its use in the present sense.
90. his] Halliwell: Strictly speaking, 'his' should be her, the female only giving the light.
90. uneffectual] Warburton: Shining without heat. Steevens: Rather, fire that is no longer seen when the light of morning approaches. Compare Per. II, iii, 43. Dyce (Gloss.): The former explanation is, I apprehend, the true one. Compare Nash: '— the ostrich, the most burning-sighted bird of all others, insomuch as the female of them hatcheth not hir eggs by covering them, but by the effectual rais of hir eies,' &c.—The Unfortunate Traveller, &c., 1594, sig. H 4. See Abbott, § 442, for the use of un- and in-; and Mach. IV, iii, 123.
90. fire] Douce (ii, 224): It was the popular belief that ghosts could not endure the light, and consequently disappeared at the dawn of day. This superstition is derived from our northern ancestors, who held that the sun and everything that contained light or fire had the property of expelling demons and spirits of all kinds. With them it seems to have originated in the stories that are related in the Edda concerning the battles of Thor against the giants and evil demons, wherein he made use of his dreadful mallet of iron. . . . Many of the transparent precious stones were supposed to have the power of expelling evil spirits, and the flint and other stones found in the tombs of the northern nations, and from which fire might be ex-

92. Coleridge: I remember nothing equal to this burst unless it be the first speech of Prometheus, in the Greek drama, after the exit of Vulcan and the two Afrites. But Sh. alone could have produced the vow of Ham. to make his memory a blank of all maxims and generalized truths, that 'observation had copied there,'—followed immediately by the speaker noting down the generalized fact, line 108.

93. Oh, fie! Caell omitted these words, 'as impertinent in the highest degree.' Steevens suspected that they were an interpolation, because they hurt the measure, and were of an almost ludicrous turn. Mitford, also (Gent. Maga. 1845, p. 583), believed that they should be removed, and Dyce (ed. ii) pronounced their omission as probably right. Boswell defended them because they occur again in II, ii, 564.

STEEVENS: So, in the Induction to The Malcontent, 1604: 'I have most of the jests of it [a play] here in my table-book.' Again, in Antonio's Revenge, Bulardo draws out his writing-tables, and writes—'Retort and obtuse, good words, very good words.' BOSWELL: See 2 Hen. IV: IV, i, 201. DOUCE: These tables were sometimes made of slate, in the form of a small portable book, with leaves and clasps. In the Middle Ages, the leaves of these table-books were made of ivory.

HUNTER (ii, 225): This expression is the first in which we have anything like the unsettled of the intellect, and what follows, to the end of the scene, can scarcely be reconciled to an opinion of the perfect sanity of Hamlet, except on the supposition that even now he began to put on the appearance of madness, which is not likely. At the same time, it is to be observed that the light and sportive sallies which follow are not absolutely out of nature, even if we suppose him sane, very powerful events not producing their natural effect at once. Some hours commonly intervene before the mind is awakened, as it were, to a sense of the change which has taken place, and during the interval men do act, not unfrequently, strangely and fantastically. When they begin to consider, then they begin to act in a manner correspondent to their situation and character. BBAE (N. & Q. 13 Mar. 1852) denies, what Coleridge asserts (see line 92), that Ham. noted down in his tables 'that one may smile, and smile, and be a villain.' 'This jotting down by Ham., upon a real, substantial table, of one of those "generalized truths," which he had just excluded from the table of his memory, would be too great a literalizing of the metaphor.' It is not this most trite reflection: 'That one may smile,' &c. that Ham. wishes to set down. No, it is the all-absorbing commandment contained in the last line of the Ghost's speech. There is one continued apostrophe from line 105 to 'So, uncle, there you are,' line 110, broken only parenthetically by line 107 while Ham. is getting forth and preparing the tables. Line 108 is an admirative comment upon line 106, and 'So, uncle, there you are,' is equivalent to the common exclamation, even at the present day, expressive of misdeeds, or intentions, unexpectedly brought to light. It is by no means uncommon for a sentence expressive of wonder or incredulity to begin with That, as in line 108; we have, in Cym. I, i, 63, 'That a king's children should be so convey'd!' The best possible stage-direction is given by Sh. himself when he makes Ham. exclaim 'Now to my word,' or, now to my memorandum, alluding to the purpose for which he had to get his tables forth. Wherefore punctuate thus: after 'set it down,' a full stop; after 'be a villain,' a note of admiration; the stage-direction [Writing] to be removed two lines lower down. To this emendation of Brae's, INGLEBY added the stage-direction 'Having kissed the tables,' after 'sworn't,' line 112. WHITE thinks that waxen tables were used as late as the Elizabethan period; see Janua Lingvarum, 1650: '—now-a-dais we write... with a writing pin in table-books, that it may be cancelled and blotted out by turning the pin the wrong end downward.' the Qq, 'for the best reasons possible,' as he says, because 'Illo, ho,' 'is too light for Hor., who is a man of education and gravity; and there is something highly solemn and proper in making Ham. say the amen to a benediction pronounc'd on himself. Having done it, he assumes in an instant the levity that was proper to cover him, and answers to the call of Mar. in his own falconer's language.' Corson, on the other hand, advocates the distribution of the Fl: 'Mar. seconds Horatio's prayer with his "So be it!" Hor. then, as Hamlet's bosom friend, uses the falconer's call, which would have been too familiar on the part of Mar., and Ham., in his excitement, responds in the same language.' Tschirschwitz believes that this refers to Hamlet's decision to assume an antic disposition, which is immediately put in practice in his hawking answers. [If the exclamation be Hamlet's, which is doubtful, is it necessary to suppose that it is a response to Marcellus's benediction? May it not refer to the conclusion of Hamlet's writing in his tables? Ed.]

115. COLERIDGE: This part of the scene after Hamlet's interview with the Ghost has been charged with an improbable eccentricity. But the truth is, after the mind has been stretched beyond its usual pitch and tone, it must either sink into exhaustion and inanity, or seek relief by change. It is thus well known that persons conversant with deeds of cruelty contrive to escape from conscience by connecting something of the ludicrous with them, and by inventing grotesque terms and a certain technical phraseology to disguise the horror of their practices. Indeed, paradoxical as it may appear, the terrible, by a law of the human mind, always touches on the verge of the ludicrous. Both arise from a perception of something out of the common order of things—something, in fact, out of its place; and if from this we can abstract danger, the uncommonness will alone remain, and the sense of the ridiculous be excited. The close alliance of these opposites,—they are not contraries,—appears from the circumstance, that laughter is equally the expression of extreme anguish, and horror, as of joy; as there are tears of sorrow and tears of joy, so there is a laugh of terror and a laugh of merriment. These complex causes will naturally have produced in Ham. the disposition to escape from his own feelings of the overwhelming and supernatural by a wild transition to the ludicrous,—a sort of cunning bravado, bordering on the flights of delirium. For you may, perhaps, observe Hamlet's wildness is but half false; he plays that subtle trick of pretending to act only when he is very near really being what he acts.

126. you are] you're Dyce ii.

123. Denmark] Seymour (ii, 162): Hamlet begins these words in the ardour of sincerity and confidence; but, suddenly alarmed at the magnitude of the disclosure he is going to make, not only to Horatio, but to another besides, he breaks off hastily: 'There's ne'er a villain in all Denmark' that can match (perhaps he would have said) my uncle in villainy; and then recollecting the danger of such a declaration, he pauses for a moment and then abruptly concludes: 'but he's an arrant knave.' MOBERLY: Hamlet turns his words off into a strange and baffling jest, as a kind of refuge from the horror which would else overmaster him, with a feeling, at the same time, that this will be the best way to defeat enquiry. 125. needs...come] For instances of the omission of to before the infinitive, see Abbott, § 349.
And so, without more circumstance at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands and part;
You, as your business and desire shall point you;
For every man hath business and desire,
Such as it is; and for my own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray.

_Hor._ These are but wild and whirling words, my lord.

_Ham._ I'm sorry they offend you, heartily;
Yes, faith, heartily.

_Hor._ There's no offence, my lord.

_Ham._ Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, Horatio, 127. _circumstance_] _Dyce_ (Gloss.): Detail. _Clarke_: Circumlocution. See III, i, 1; _Mer. of Ven._ i, i, 154.

132. _go pray_] _Clarendon_: Compare the phrases, 'go seek,' II, i, 101; 'go sleep,' Temp. II, i, 190; 'go kindle,' _Two Gent._ II, vi, 19; 'go watch,' _Merry Wives_, I, iv, 7; 'come view,' _Mer. of Ven._ II, vi, 43.

136. _Saint Patrick_] _Warburton_: At this time all the whole northern world had their learning from Ireland; to which place it had retired, and there flourished under the auspices of this saint. But it was, I suppose, only said at random. _Caldecott_: As Sh. gave the living manners, customs, and habits of thinking of his own country to those of all ages and countries that he introduced upon the stage, he would little hesitate to make any stranger invoke the name of a saint familiar and popular in his own. _TschiYitzheit_: If Sh. had wished to be historically correct, he would have made a Dane swear by St. Ansgarius. But since the subject concerned an inexpiated crime, he naturally thought of St. Patrick, who kept a Purgatory of his own. See _The Honest Whore_ [pt. 2, i, i, p. 330, Dodsley ed. 1825, where the text reads, 'St. Patrick, you know, keeps Purgatory,' and not as the learned German quotes: 'keeps his Purgatory.' Ed.] _Moberly_: Saint Patrick, the patron saint of all blunders and confusion.

136. _Horatio_] _Corson_: The 'my lord' (of the _Ff_) in Hamlet's speech is a retort to the 'my lord' in Horatio's speech, and has an effect which is lost in the _Qq_ text.

HAMLET

[ACT 1, SC. V.]

And much offence too. Touching this vision here,
It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you;
For your desire to know what is between us,
O'ermaster't as you may. And now, good friends,
As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord? we will.
Ham. Never make known what you have seen to-night.

Hor. [Mar.] My lord, we will not.
Ham. Nay, but swear't.
Hor. In faith,

My lord, not I.
Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.
Ham. Upon my sword.
Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

147. We have] We've Pope, Han.

137. offence] DELIUS: Hamlet purposely misunderstands his friends' words, in order to evade their enquiries. At first he pretends that his words have given offence, whereas his friends have merely found them vague; and when they reply that there is no offence, he takes 'offence' in a wider sense as a 'crime,' and refers it to the crime of his uncle that had just been divulged to him.

137. too] CAPELL (i, 128): The most emphatical word in this sentence is 'too.' CORSON: There should be only a comma after this word. Hamlet refers to the wrong which, he has just learned, had been done his father: 'Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is, my Lord, And much offence too, touching this Vision here.'

138. honest] HUDSON: Hamlet means that it is a real Ghost, just what it appears to be, and not 'the Devil' in 'a pleasing shape,' as Horatio had apprehended it to be.

147. sword] UPTON (p. 61, n.): He swears them on his sword, very soldier-like, and agreeable to the ancient custom of his country. Jordanes in his Gothic History
Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

 mentions this custom. Ammianus Marcellinus relates the same ceremony among the Huns. Johnson: Garrick produced me a passage, I think, in Brantôme, from which it appeared that it was common to swear upon the cross which the old swords always had upon the hilt. Douce (ii, 229): In consequence of this practice, the name of Jesus was sometimes inscribed on the handle or some other part. Nares: The singular mixture of religious and military fanaticism which arose from the Crusades gave rise to the extraordinary custom of taking a solemn oath upon a sword. In a plain, unenriched sword, the separation between the blade and the hilt was usually a straight transverse bar, which, suggesting the idea of a cross, added to the devotion which every true knight felt for his favorite weapon, and evidently led to this practice; of which the instances are too numerous to be collected. The sword or the blade were often mentioned in this ceremony without reference to the cross. It is ludicrously referred to in 1 Hen. IV: II, iv, 371. Dyce (Gloss.): The custom of swearing by a sword prevailed even among the barbarous worshippers of Odin: 'The Scythians commonly substituted a sword as the most proper symbol to represent the supreme god. It was by planting a spear in the middle of a field that they usually marked out the place set apart for prayers and sacrifices; and when they had relaxed from their primitive strictness, so far as to build temples and set up idols in them, they yet preserved some traces of the ancient custom by putting a sword in the hands of Odin's statues. The respect they had for their arms made them also swear by instruments so valuable and so useful, as being the most sacred things they knew. Accordingly, in an ancient Icelandic poem, a Scandinavian, to assure himself of a person's good faith, requires him to swear, "by the shoulder of a horse, and the edge of a sword."' This oath was usual more especially on the eve of some great engagement; the soldiers engaged themselves by an oath of this kind not to flee, though their enemies should be never so superior in number.'—Mallet's Northern Antiquities, &c., transl. by Percy, vol. i, p. 216, ed. 1770. [For many instances of oaths taken upon swords, see Farmer, Steevens and Caldecott. Ed.] Knight: We have little doubt that Sh. was aware of the peculiar custom of the Gothic nations, and did not make Hamlet propose the oath merely as a practice of chivalry.

147. already] Hudson: The oath they have already sworn is 'in faith.' But this has not enough of ritual solemnity in it to satisfy Hamlet.

148. Indeed] Staunton: The meaning of Hamlet unquestionably is, Not in words only, but in act, in form; upon the cross of my sword, pledge yourselves.

149. Coleridge: These subterraneous speeches of the Ghost are hardly defensible; but I would call your attention to the characteristic difference between the Ghost, as a superstition connected with the most mysterious truths of revealed religion,—and Shakespeare's consequent reverence in his treatment of it,—and the foul earthy witcheries and wild language in Macbeth.
Ham. Ah, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there,

150. true-penny] Steevens: This word, as well as some of Hamlet's former exclamations, we find in Nash's Almond for a Parrot. It is (as I learn from some Sheffield authorities) a mining term, and signifies a particular indication in the soil of the direction in which ore is to be found. Hence Hamlet may with propriety address the Ghost under ground by that name. Forby (Vocab. of East Anglia): Hearty old fellow; staunch and trusty; true to his purpose or pledge. Halliwell suspects that it was sometimes applied to a sexton, therefore very appropriate here. Upton (p. 9, note): 'The Vice,' in our old Morallies, was used to make fun with the Devil, and he had several trite expressions, as, 'I'll be with you in a trice,' 'Ah, ha, boy, are you there?' &c. And it was great entertainment to the audience, to see their old enemy belaboured in effigy. Now, Ham. is resolved to break the subject of the discourse to none but Hor.; to others he intends to appear as a sort of madman, he therefore now addresses the Ghost as The Vice does the Devil, at the same time he wishes the sentinels to imagine that this was a shape the Devil had put on; and in II, ii, 575, he is somewhat of this opinion himself. This manner of speech was what the audience were well acquainted with; and it takes off in some measure from the horror of the scene.

153. seen] Walker (Crit. iii, 263): The inversion [by putting only a comma after 'seen'] is anti-Shakesperean. Corson: Horatio asks Hamlet to propose the oath, which he does, namely: 'Never to speak of this that you have seen,' and then, having done so, he tells them to swear by his sword, which is additional.

156. Hic et ubique] Tschischwitz: The repetition of the oath, the shifting of the ground, and the Latin phrase are taken from the ceremonies of conjurors. Silberschlag (Morgenblatt, No. 47, 1860, p. 1113): It is highly probable the conclu-
Come hither, gentlemen,
And lay your hands again upon my sword,
Never to speak of this that you have heard;
Swear by my sword.

Ham. Well said, old mole! canst work i' the earth so fast?
A worthy pioneer!—Once more remove, good friends.

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.

157-160. Come...sword As in Ff. End lines, hands...sword Cam. Edd. conj.

158, 159. sword...heard: Ff, Walker, Corson. sword...heard: Ff, Ff, F, sword. ...heard; Rowe +, sword: ...heard: Cald. et cet.

159, 160. Never...sword These lines are transposed in Qq, Jen, Steev, Var. and Sing. In Cap. also, but lines 157-160 end: hands...my sword...heard. Cap. is followed by Ktly.

159. this that is, which Rowe ii. heard heard to-night Seymour.

Note: This scene is a remnant, word for word, of the earlier tragedy by Shakespeare's predecessor; and this little snatch of Latinity upholds this view. The dramatic predecessors of Shakespeare were very fond of interlarding their pieces with such little snatches of Latin, and Shakespeare yielded to the practice only in his very earliest plays, not in his later ones. Therefore, from the use of these little phrases alone we might infer that Shakespeare retained all of these concluding lines from the earlier drama, perhaps from no other reason than that the scene had become a popular favorite.

158. upon my sword, Walker (Crit. iii, 263) was the first to advocate this punctuation of Ff; and Corson says: 'The true meaning is indicated by the comma after "sword." The "swear by my sword" is but a repetition of the same idea.' Walker adds: 'The Ghost's "Swear by his sword"—if this reading be correct—is, as it were, an echo of Hamlet's words.' In the textual notes the punctuation of those editors alone is given who have followed the arrangement of the Ff.

163. pioneer Nares: A pioneer; an attendant on an army, whose office is to dig, level, remove obstructions, form trenches, and do all works executed with warlike tools, as spades, &c. Dyce (Glos.): They are generally soldiers who, on account of misconduct, had been degraded to the office. [For the spelling, see Walker, Vers. 217; Crit. iii, 263; Abbott, § 492. Also I, ii, 172; III, iv, 206. Ed.]

165. welcome Warburton: Receive it to yourself; take it under your own roof; as much as to say: Keep it secret. Alluding to the laws of hospitality. Mason: Hamlet means merely to request that they would seem not to know it,—to be unacquainted with it. Caldecott: Receive it courteously and compliantly. Claren don: Receive it without doubt or question.
There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.
But come;

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,
As I perchance hereafter shall think meet
To put an antic disposition on,
That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,
As 'Well, well, we know,' or 'We could, an if we would,'

(Sh. Rest. p. 59).

167. your] Walker (Crit. ii, 7; iii, 264) prefers our. White: This reading of the Qq is the poorer, but commoner. Clarendon: For this colloquial and familiar use, see III, ii, 3; III, ii, 117; IV, iii, 21-24; Ant. & Cleop. II, viii, 29. Corson: Hamlet and Horatio had been fellow-students at the University; this may explain the use of 'our.' Or it would be better, perhaps, to understand Hamlet as using it in the general sense of human philosophy, which is limited in its scope. Why he should say 'your,' does not appear. [It is used ethically. See 'me,' II, ii, 414. Ed.]

172. antic] Clarendon: Disguised, as in Rom. & Jul. I, v, 54. Morely: A counterfeit madness such as Hamlet afterwards uses. The word 'antic' means first 'old-fashioned;' then 'quaint,' 'capricious,' and the like. In much the same way 'modern' means 'ordinary.'

173. such] Corson: 'Such times seeing' is harsh. The Ff text is better. Abbott, § 470, in scanning this line contracts 'seeing' rather than 'never.'
174. head-shake] Corson: According to the Ff, 'shake' is a verb, having 'shall' as its auxiliary —with arms encumbered thus, or thus (suiting the action to the words), head shake.'

175. of] For instances of 'of' following verbal nouns, see Abbott, § 178.
Or 'If we list to speak,' or 'There be, an if they might,'
Or such ambiguous giving out, to note
That you know aught of me; this not to do,
So grace and mercy at your most need help you, Swear.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit!—So, gentlemen,
With all my love I do commend me to you;
And what so poor a man as Hamlet is
May do, to express his love and friend ing to you,
God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;
And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.
The time is out of joint;—O cursed spite,

Nay, come, let's go together.

ACT II

SCENE I. A room in Polonius's house.

Enter Polonius and Reynaldo.

Pol. Give him this money and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvellous wisely, good Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry

Of his behaviour.

7. Danskers] Dans'ckers Cap. (corrected in MS*).

190. right] SEYMOUR (ii, 164): Ham. does not lament that the disjointed time is to be set right by him, but that he, ... whose duty it of necessity becomes to set the time right, should have been born.

3. shall] For instances of 'shall' for will, see III, ii, 317; Mach. III, iv, 57, and ABBOTT, § 315.

3. marvellous] For instances of adjectives used as adverbs, see I, iii, 116; III, ii, 288, and ABBOTT, § 1.

4. inquiry] CLARENDON adopts the Qq reading, and justifies it on the thoroughly

Shakespearian usage of various parts of speech as nouns, such as 'avouch,' I, i, 57; ‘disclose,' III, i, 166. For many other examples, see ABBOTT, § 451.

7. Danskers] CAPELL (i, 128): Danske, for Denmark, occurs often in Albion' England
And how, and who; what means, and where they keep;
What company, at what expense; and finding
By this encompassment and drift of question
That they do know my son, come you more nearer Than your particular demands will touch it;
Take you, as 'twere, some distant knowledge of him,
As thus, 'I know his father and his friends,
And in part him.' Do you mark this, Reynaldo?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. 'And in part him; but,' you may say, 'not well;
But if't be he I mean, he's very wild,
Addicted' so and so; and there put on him
What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank
As may dishonour him; take heed of that;
But, sir, such wanton, wild, and usual slips
As are companions noted and most known
To youth and liberty.

8. keep] Dyce (\textit{Gloss.}): To live, to dwell.
11. nearer] For instances of double comparatives, see Abbott, \textit{f 11.}
Clarendon: 'Neere' of \textit{F}, shows that the double comparative was growing obsolete in 1632. Knightly believes all difficulty to be removed by following Jennens' reading. Moberly: By these natural and circuitous inquiries you will get nearer the point than you possibly could by a direct question. [Pol. repeats this same idea in lines 65, 66. For other instances of double comparatives, see III, ii, 291; III, iv, 157; V, ii, 121. Ed.]
12. it] See Abbott, \textit{f 226}, for instances of 'it' used indefinitely, as the object of a verb, without referring to anything previously mentioned, and seeming to indicate a pre-existing object in the mind of the person spoken of, 'or in the mind of the speaker, as in this instance,' Clarendon adds.
22. slips] Clarendon: Compare \textit{Oth}. IV, i, 9. Perhaps Sh. had the other sense of the word in his mind, as in \textit{2 Hen. IV}: III, ii, 214: 'graft with crab-tree slip.'
24. To youth] Delius: This qualifies 'companions.'
Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, quarrelling, Drabbing; you may go so far.

Rey. My lord, that would dishonour him.

Pol. Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge. You must not put another scandal on him, That he is open to incontinency;

That's not my meaning; but breathe his faults so quaintly That they may seem the taints of liberty, The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind, A savageness in unreclaimed blood, Of general assault.

Rey. But, my good lord,—

Pol. Wherefore should you do this?

25, 26. Ay,..far.] Cap. The first line ends at swearing, in QqF, Rowe+, Jen.
28. no] Om. Qq.
31. breathe] breath QqF,F,F, Rowe, Cap.

25. fencing] This is bracketed by Warburton as 'an interpolation.' Johnson: A too diligent frequentation of the fencing-school, a resort of violent and lawless young men. Malone: I suppose it means piquing himself on his skill in the use of the sword, and consequently quarrelling and brawling. 'The cunning of Fencers [is now] applied to quarrelling.'—Gosson, Schools of Abuse, 1579, p. 46, ed. Arber.

29. another] Theobald (Sh. Restored, p. 61), on the ground that there could be no second scandal without a first (and Polonius implies that 'Drabbing' is no scandal), conjectured an utter for 'another.' And this emendation was adopted by Han. Warb. Johns. and Elze. But Theobald, in his edition, withdrew it, because Sh. uses 'other' in the same way elsewhere; as in Rich. II: I, i, 33, and Macb. IV, iii, 90. Malone: That is, a very different and more scandalous failing: habitual incontinency. More precisely: A deeper kind of scandal; much as ἀδόλος means 'particularly,' and ἀδόλος ἐδίνεω, in the Odyssey, 'an out-of-the-way or foreign traveller.'

31. breathe] Dyce (Gloss.): To utter, to speak; see also line 44.
31. quaintly] Dyce (Gloss.): Ingeniously, cleverly, artfully.
34. unreclaimed] Clarendon: Cotgrave has 'Adomestiquer: To tame, reclaim, make gentle.' A term of falconry.
34. savageness...assault] Dyce (Gloss.): A wildness in untamed blood, to which all young men are liable.

Clarendon: The fetch of wit of the Qq is 'a cunning contrivance,' and makes as good sense as the reading of the Ff, with which compare 'passages of proof,' IV, vii, 113. In Lear, II, iv, 90, 'fetches' mean pretexts, excuses.

65. windlasses] NARES: Metaphorically, art and contrivance, subtleties; e.g. 'Which, by sly drifts, and windlasses aloof, They brought about.'—Mirror for Magistrates, p. 336. Windlaiies is used by Fairfax, for sudden turns; whether he meant this word or another, is not quite clear: perhaps, rather, windings.— The beauties faire of shepherd's daughters bold, With wanton windlaiies runne, turne, play, and passe.— Tasso, xiv, 34. HUNTER (ii, 226): Windlaiies is used in a sense now forgotten. We find it in Golding's Ovid, the seventh book, the book in which Sh. was so well read: '—like a wily fox he runs not forth directly out, Nor makes a windlaisse over all the champion fields about,' &c. It is also used by Bishop Hacket.

66. essays of bias] CLARENDON: A metaphor from the game of bowls, in which the player does not aim at the Jack (or 'mistress,' as it was called in Shakespeare's time) directly, but in a curve, so that the bias brings the ball round. 'Assays of bias' are therefore indirect attempts.

in keeping with the loquacity of Polonius, we are justified, nevertheless, in expecting a reply from the departing servant. I have therefore given the words ‘God be wi’ you’ (which, by the contraction of with into wi’, express a certain condensation) to Polonius, and ‘fare you well’ to Reynaldo.

70. Good my lord] DYE: Reynaldo has previously said ‘Very good, my lord,’ and he afterwards says, ‘Well, my lord,’ but the present speech is not therefore to be pointed ‘Good, my lord.’ Compare II, ii, 521.

71. in yourself] JOHNSON: Perhaps this means, in your own person, not by spies. CAPELL (i, 129): ‘In yourself’ is put for—observe of yourself, or with your own eyes; for he had been lesson’d before to pick up his ‘inclination’ from others. C. (in Var. 1821): The temptations you feel, suspect in him. CALDECOTT: It seems no more than ‘of or by yourself,’ and as if the word ‘in’ had been altogether omitted. He was at first to discover Laertes’s inclination by enquiry from others; but now to find them out by personal observation. TSCHISCHWITZ: I find it hard to persuade myself that ‘in’ is anything more than a misprint, which arose from the last syllable of the preceding word. A change of ‘in’ into then could be easily made except for the uniformity of the old copies. CLARENDON: Possibly it means, Conform your own conduct to his inclinations.

73. music] CLARKE: Let him go on, to what tune he pleases; let him conduct himself in any style and at any rate he chooses. HUDSON: Eye him sharply, but do it stily, and let him fiddle his secrets all out. VISCHER (Sh. Jahrbuch, ii, p. 149): Here we have the key to the whole scene. His son may gamble, drink, swear, quarrel, drab, enter houses of sale, videlicet, brothels, only—let him ply his music: true cavalier-breeding!

74. matter] MOBERLY: There is a wonderfully fine contrast between the prolix sifness of Polonius’s attempt to find out what had better be unknown, and the scene of distracting and passionate misery which shows how Hamlet’s soul has been shattered by an unsought-for revelation.

79. stockings] Stocking Qq.

foul'd] fouled Qq, loose Q'76, Theob. +.

The supposition that Hamlet went to Ophelia directly after the interview with the Ghost is incorrect, and for the following reasons: first, the interview between Polonius and Reynaldo implies that some little time has elapsed since the departure of Laertes for Paris; secondly, during this time Ophelia has returned Hamlet's letters, and denied him access; her father asks her, 'Have you given him any hard words of late?' The letter which Polonius reads to the King must, therefore, have belonged to a period before the opening of the drama. Ophelia had strictly obeyed her father's commands, and returned all Hamlet's letters. Thirdly, Polonius goes at once to the King, and yet, when he speaks to him of Hamlet, the King already knew of Hamlet's (feigned) insanity, and therefore must himself have seen the Prince before Ophelia saw him. Fourthly, between the close of the first act and the present scene, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern must have been summoned on account of Hamlet's changed demeanor, and of the King's suspicions which that demeanor had aroused.

77. closet] CLARENDON: A private apartment. Hence the King's private secretary was called 'clerk of the closet.' See III, ii, 315; and King John, IV, ii, 267.

79. foul'd] CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: Theobald reads loose on the authority, as he says, 'of the elder Qq.' It is not the reading of any of the first six, but of those of 1676, 1683, 1695, and 1703. Had Capell been aware of this, he would scarcely have designated Theobald's mistake as a 'downright falsehood.' Theobald at the time of writing his Sh. Restored knew of no Quarto earlier than that of 1637 (Sh. Rest. p. 70), and it is just possible that some copy of this edition (Q4) from which that of 1676 was printed may have had the reading 'loose.' [The Cam. Edd. refer to a note on III, iv, 59, where they give two different readings in two different copies of Q4: 'a heaven-kissing' in Ingleby's copy, and 'a heave, a kissing,' in Capell's copy. This variation in copies of the same date has long been known to exist in the older Q4, but, I confess, I was not prepared to find much variation in later Q4 of the same date. In no less than twenty-four instances, however, I have found that my copy of Q'76 differs from that of the Cam. Edd., as recorded in their notes. Ed.]

Elizabeth, for a man professing himself deeply in love to assume a certain negligence in dress. His garters, in particular, were not to be tied up. See As You Like It, III, ii, 398.

80. down-gyved] THEOBALD interprets his reading, down-gyred, as 'rolled down to the ankle,' and derives gyred from γύρω, to bend, to round. HEATH gives the true definition of 'down-gyved': fallen down to the ankle, after the fashion of gyves, or fetters.

82. purport] WALKER (iii, 264): Pronounce 'purport,' not 'piteous.'

82, 83. 80... As] See ABBOTT, § 275; and II, ii, 177; or Macb. I, ii, 43.

84. KEIGHTLEY completed the rhythm of this line by the insertion of in after 'comes.' ABBOTT, § 478, makes the second syllable of 'horrors' a foot by itself on the principle that 'er [or or] final seems to have been sometimes pronounced with a kind of 'burr,' which produced the effect of an additional syllable. A process which neither my tongue nor my imagination can compass. Why not let Ophelia's strong emotion shudderingly fill up the gap?

II: III, iii, 53; Tro. & Cret. IV, v, 232. [Also, Ham. IV, vii, 137.]

91. stay'd] ABBOTT, § 507: As ed is pronounced after i and u, so it might be after y in 'stayed,' but the effect would be painful. The pause after 'it' must supply the extra syllable.

92. shaking] TCHISCHWITZ: A verbal substantive; is made is understood.
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,
He raised a sigh so piteous and profound
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk
And end his being; that done, he lets me go;
And with his head over his shoulder turn’d

For out o’ doors he went without their help,
And to the last bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me; I will go seek the king.

100. MILES (Review of Hamlet, p. 28): We are not permitted to see Hamlet in this ecstasy of love, but what a picture! How he must have loved her, that love should bring him to such a pass!—his knees knocking each other!—knees that had firmly followed a beckoning ghost! There is more than the love of forty thousand brothers in that hard grasp of the wrist,—in that long gaze at arm’s length,—in the force that might, but will not, draw her nearer! And never a word from this king of words! His first great silence,—the second is death!

102. ecstasy Alienation of mind, madness. See III, i, 160; III, iv, 74; 138, 139; Marb. III, ii, 22; IV, iii, 170.

 _fortune_ (frequent in Sh.), or of _cess_.
112. _quoted_] M. Mason: Invariably used by Sh. in the sense of _to observe_.
 Malone: ‘Quoter, To _quote_, or _mark_ in the margin, to note by the way.’—Cotgrave.
 Dyce (Gloss.): To note, to mark,—formerly pronounced, and often written.
113. _wreck_] Collier (ed. 2): This is one of the places where the old spelling of ‘wreck,’ _wrack_ (observed by some modern editors, as if we ought to return to the loose and uncertain orthography of our ancestors), produces confusion. It is not quite clear whether Pol. means _wrack_, in the sense of cast away, or _rack_, in the sense of tortured; we have taken it in the former, as the most probable.
 Upton (p. 209): _Read: ‘rack’ thee, i. e._ vex and griev thee.
113. _beshrew_] Dyce (Gloss): To curse,—but a mild form of imprecation, = ‘a

115. _cast_] Johnson: This is not the remark of a weak man. The vice of age is too much suspicion. Men long accustomed to the wiles of life _cast_ commonly _beyond themselves_, let their cunning go farther than reason can attend it. This is always the fault of a little mind, made artful by long commerce with the world.
 Moberly: To forecast more than we ought for our own interests. Clarendon:
 To ‘contrive,’ ‘design,’ ‘plan.’ Compare Spenser’s _Fairy Queen_, l, 5, 12: ‘Of all attion he cast avenged to be.’ Cotgrave translates Fr. _minuter_, ‘to devise, cast, or lay the first project of a design.’

118, 119. Warburton: That is, this must be made known to the King, for (being kept secret) the hiding of Hamlet's love might occasion more mischief to us from him and the Queen, than the uttering or revealing of it will occasion hate and resentment from Hamlet. The poet's obscure expression seems to have been caused by his affection of concluding the scene with a couplet. Heath: The concealment of it may be attended with consequences productive of greater calamity than the displeasure can possibly be with which the disclosing it may be received. Caldecott: At the close of an act, or when the scene is shifted, and there is a pause in the action of the drama, it was the usage of our dramatists, down to the middle of the last century, not simply to divert attention from the main object, as here, by the introduction of a couplet or rhymes, but to make the subject of such couplet foreign altogether to the interests of the drama, an unconnected flourish, and that, not unfrequently, a labored and florid simile. Such a custom in Sh., so far from being what Warburton calls it, was the very opposite of 'affectation;' not to have done it occasionally would have been an affection of singularity. Clarendon: In the couplets which conclude scenes the sense is frequently sacrificed to the rhyme. The sense here seems to be—Hamlet's mad conduct might cause more grief if it were hidden than the revelation of his love for Ophelia would cause hatred, i.e. on the part of the King and Queen. Yet the Queen afterwards expresses her approval of the match, III, i, 38. Compare also, V, i, 231-234. Tschischwitz cannot persuade himself that the author of the Sonnets and of Venus & Adonis could have composed lines so faulty in logic and style as these, and he therefore thinks that even sticklers for the authorized text will pardon him for changing line 119 into 'More grief to him, than hate to us their love.' He also marks 'Ophelia exit' after line 117.

1. Rosencrantz] Thornbury (N. & Qu. 5 Aug. 1871): A Danish nobleman.

The need we have to use you did provoke
Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,

More than his father's death, that thus hath put him
So much from th' understanding of himself,
I cannot dream of. I entreat you both, of this name attended the Danish ambassador into England on the ascension of James I. [Steevens says it was an ambassador, Ed.]

2. Moreover that] Moberly: Over and above that we longed to see you. On the other hand, 'more above,' in line 125, means 'moreover.' Clarendon: Besides that. Hudson: I do not recollect another instance of these words thus used.

5. transformation] On the pronunciation of the final ion as a disyllable, see Walker, Vers. 230; Abbott, § 479, and V, ii, 217.

6. Sith] Moberly: The oldest meaning of this difficult word may be seen from the Fairy Queen (iii, 10, 33), 'he humbly thanked him a thousand sith,' literally, 'a thousand steps' (Matzner, i, p. 390 [? 410]). Hence, apparently, 'sithen the fathers died,' in Wickliffe's Bible, means 'from the time when,' the preposition being omitted, as in many English phrases even now. Then come the absolutes 'sith, sithence, since,' as in line 12 below. Lastly, the adverb becomes a causative conjunction; on the principle that 'propter hoc' may be practically, though loosely, expressed by 'post hoc.' That is, 'Sin thou are righteous judge' means 'following on the fact that thou art a righteous judge.' Clarendon: Marsh (Lectures on the English Language, pp. 584-586) says, that in the latter half of the sixteenth century
'good authors established a distinction between the forms, and used sith only as a logical word, an illative, while sithence and since, whether as prepositions or as adverbs, remained mere narrative words confined to the signification of time after.'
Sh., it is clear, did not observe this distinction, whether we take the quartos or the folios to represent his exact text." [See IV, iv, 45.]

10. dream of] Caldecott: Deem of, that is, the just estimate of himself I cannot judge of, or comprehend. White: Sh. not improbably wrote as it stands in the Fi. Clarendon: The of is superfluous, as in Rich. III: I, iii, 6.

11. of so young] Abbott, § 167: 'Of,' applied to time, in cases like the present,

30. bent] Johnson (Much Ado, IV, i, 188): 'Bent' is used by Sh. for the utmost degree of any passion or mental quality. The expression is derived from archery; the bow has its bent when it is drawn as far as it can be. [See Ham. III, ii, 367.]

42 still] See I, i, 122.

As it hath used to do, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. Oh, speak of that; that do I long to hear.

Pol. Give first admittance to the ambassadors;
My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt it is no other but the main,—
His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

45. and] KNIGHT: The reading of the Ff means that Polonius holds that his duty to his king is an obligation as imperative as his duty to his God, to whom his soul is subject. Dyce (Structures, &c., 187) truly says that the attempts to explain the error, one, of the Ff, have proved unsuccessful. Hudson: I hold my duty both to my God and to my king, as I do my soul.

47. "ail] JOHNSON: The course of an animal pursued by the scent.

51. first] MOBERLY: Thus Polonius gains the opportunity of studying a brief and pointed exordium, the only fault in which is its being altogether needless and misplaced.

52. fruit] JOHNSON: The dessert after the meat. Caldecott (see Textual Notes):
By news must be meant the talk or leading topic at, &c. Hunter (ii, 227): The Ff may suggest the true reading: nuts. We still say, 'It will be nuts to him,' where a person has to hear something that will please him. The allusion to a banquet is kept up. Tschirschwitz adopts this emendation of Hunter's.

54. Gertrude] WHITE: This smacks less of the honeymoon than the text of the Ff.

56. main] Caldecott: The chief point. See Tro. & Cret. II, iii, 273. 'These flaws, are to the main as inconsiderable,' &c.—Par. Reg. iv, 454. Staunton: An ellipsis,—in being understood:—no other but in the main.' Clarendon: 'Main' is used without a substantive following in 2 Hen. VI: I, i, 208.
King. Well, we shall sift him.—

Re-enter Polonius, with Voltimand and Cornelius.

Welcome, my good friends!

Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies, which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack,
But better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your highness; whereat, grieved
That so his sickness, age, and impotence
Was falsely borne in hand, sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys, Receives rebuke from Norway, and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle never more
To give the assay of arms against your majesty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy, Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee commercial value of money in those earlier ages, and thinks it probable that in the poor kingdom of Norway, in Hamlet's time, the king's whole revenue might scarce amount to so large a sum. HUNTER (ii, 228): The reading of Q. is one proof, amongst others, either that the editors of F. did not disdain the assistance of Q., imperfect as it is, or that Q. has preserved readings which the editors of F. had other reasons for knowing to be genuine.

73. fee] Ritson: The king gave his nephew a feud, or fee (in land), of that yearly value.

79. safety and allowance] CLARENDON: Terms securing the safety of the country and regulating the passage of the troops through it.

80. It likes] ABBOTT ($ 297): An abundance of impersonal verbs is a mark of an early stage in a language, denoting that a speaker has not yet arrived so far in development as to trace his own actions and feelings to his own agency. There are many more impersonal verbs in Early English than in Elizabethan, and many more in Elizabethan than in modern English. See 'Well be (it) with you,' II, ii, 362, III. iv, 173; V, ii, 63. MATZNER (iii, 174) gives the same phrase: 'It likes us well,' from King John, II, i, 533, with the following explanation: 'The dative in Germanic verbs passes completely into the accusative where the consciousness of the language abandons the substitute for the dative by the periphrasis with to.'

well-luck'd as passing a sort of compliment on the address, skill, and good-fortune of Cor. and Volt. But he did not repeat the conjecture in his edition.

84. feast] Johnson: The king's intemperance is never suffered to be forgotten.

85. Johnson: Polonius is a man bred in courts, exercised in business, stored with observation, confident in his knowledge, proud of his eloquence, and declining into dotage. His mode of oratory is truly represented as designed to ridicule the practice of those times, of prefaces that made no introduction, and of method that embarrassed rather than explained. This part of his character is accidental, the rest is natural. Such a man is positive and confident, because he knows that his mind was once strong, and knows not that it is become weak. Such a man excels in general principles, but fails in the particular application. He is knowing in retrospect, and ignorant in foresight. While he depends upon his memory, and can draw from his repositories of knowledge, he utters weighty sentences, and gives useful counsel; but as the mind in its enfeebled state cannot be kept long busy and intent, the old man is subject to sudden dereliction of his faculties; he loses the order of his ideas, and entangles himself in his own thoughts, till he recovers the leading principle, and falls again into his former train. This idea of dotage encroaching upon wisdom will solve all the phenomena of the character of Polonius. Caldecott: Nothing can be more easily conceivable or intelligible than the 'idea of dotage encroaching upon wisdom'; but does this apply to Polonius? To be extinguished, talent or faculty must first have existence. Now we have nothing that directly goes to establish the fact of his having at any time a clear and commanding intellect. Almost everything has, on the contrary, an opposite bearing; for the very quality relied upon by Dr Johnson appears to us to be that which most strongly indicates imbecility of mind, viz. having the memory stored with sage rules and maxims, fit for every turn and occasion, without the faculty of making effective use of them upon any. In Polonius's general conduct, unmixed folly or dotage is visible at every turn. Mobery: In estimating this character we should do well to remember that the use of language like that of Polonius would not in Shakespeare's euphuistic days argue the complete folly that it would at the present time. [See also 1, iii, 59. Ed.]

86. expostulate] Caldecott: To show by discussion, to put the pros and cons, to answer demands upon the question. 'Pausanias had now opportunity to visit her and to expostulate the favorable deceit, whereby she had caused his jealousy.'—Stanley's Aurora, 1659, p. 44. Hunter (ii, 228): 'Expostulate' is of rare occurrence. It occurs in A Brief Relation of the Shipwreck of Henry May, 1593, incorporated in Captain Smith's book on Virginia: 'How these isles came by the name of the Bermudas, ... I will not expostulate, nor trouble your patience with these uncertain antiquities,' p. 172. It means, to inquire, and when it is an inquiry from a superior in a state of displeasure, we get at once to what is the present significance of the word. Thus, in the manuscript book of Anecdotes collected by Sir

What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and time.
Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it; for, to define true madness,
What is't but to be nothing else but mad?
But let that go.

Queen. More matter, with less art.

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true; 'tis true 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis 'tis true; a foolish figure;
But farewell it, for I will use no art.
Mad let us grant him then; and now remains
That we find out the cause of this effect,
Or rather say, the cause of this defect,
For this effect defective comes by cause.
Thus it remains and the remainder thus.

90. wit] JOHNSON (Note on line 382): 'Wit' was not in Shakespeare's time taken either for imagination or acuteness, or both together, but for understanding, for the faculty by which we apprehend and judge. Those who wrote of the human mind distinguished its primary powers into wit and will. STAUNTON: Wisdom. CLARENDON: Knowledge. So Mer. of Ven. II, i, 18.
93. Mad call I it] MOBERLY: 'It is of no use to explain how.' This shrewd remark is one of many that Polonius draws from his repositories of knowledge, and from that former wisdom on which dotage is rapidly encroaching.

105. Perpend] CLARENDON: Like 'gather and surmise, this is used in accordance with Polonius's pedantic style. See As You Like It, III, ii, 69.

109. ALFRED ROFFE (N. & Qu. 5 Oct. 1861) gives a list of no less than nine metrical and musical adaptations of this letter of Hamlet's. One of them, in date about 1800, 'Composed for and dedicated to Miss Abrams by Michael Kelly,' is as follows: 'Doubt (O most beautified), that the stars are fire, Doubt (my soul's idol), that the sun doth move, Doubt that eternal Truth may prove a liar, But, sweet Ophelia, never doubt I love. My mind no skill in these fond numbers owns, Yet these declare I love thee best, most best, And though no Muses reckon up my groans, These lines may shelter in thy snowy breast.'

109. beautified] THEOBALD objected to this word, because of its two meanings, viz. artificial and natural beauty; the first would be manifestly inappropiate here, and the second Sh. has used in Two Gent. IV, i, 55, and would not, therefore, here call it a 'vile phrase.' He therefore substituted beautified, which is less of an antyclimax than 'beautified,' after 'Celestial and soul's idol,' and which, moreover, would be the more likely to excite the Roman Catholic Polonius to anger, since it is almost peculiarly applied to the Virgin Mary. CAPELL (i, 130) prefers beautified, because of its concordance with 'celestial' and 'idol,' and because the passage demands it, which is certainly verse. Accordingly, he reads lines 109 to 112, inclusive, as verse, dividing at 'idol' (which, metri gratia, he reads 'fair idol'), 'Ophelia,' 'beautified' (which he reads 'that beautify'd'), 'these.' JOHNSON: 'Beautified' seems to be a vile phrase for the ambiguity of its meaning. STEEVENS; Nash dedicates his Christ's Tears over Jerusalem, 1594, 'To the most beautified lady, the lady Elizabeth Carey.' NARES: A common word in those times, particularly in the addresses of letters. The examples wherein a person is said to be 'beautified' with various endowments seem hardly apposite. CALDECOTT: That is, accomplished.
—metricall speach . . . by Art bewtified and adorned, and brought far from the primitiue rudenessse.'—Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, 1589 [p. 39, ed. Arber]. DYCE (Gloss.) : By 'beautified' (which, however 'vile a phrase,' is common enough in our early writers) I believe Hamlet meant beautiful, and not accomplished That’s an ill phrase, a vile phrase; beautified’ is a vile phrase; but you shall hear. Thus:

[Reads.] ‘In her excellent white bosom, these,’ &c.

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful.

[Reads.] ‘Doubt thou the stars are fire;
Doubt that the sun doth move;
Doubt truth to be a liar;
But never doubt I love.

O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers. I have not art to reckon my groans; but that I love thee best, O most best, believe it. Adieu.

from Jen. substantially. hear: thus in Qq. hear these in Ff. hear—These to Rowe+. hear;—These in Cap. hear. These. In Knt. hear this; In Tsch. conj.

113. Thus] Corson: It would seem that the first ‘these’ in the Ff is right, the second being a mere repetition for emphasis; so that all that is wanting in the F is a colon after ‘heare.’ ‘These in her excellent white bosom, these’! The expression is evidently directive or optative, and given as an introduction to ‘Doubt thou, the Starres are,’ etc. There is a studied oddness in the letter, as is shown by the subscription. Malone: I have never met with ‘these’ both at the beginning and the end of the superscription of letters.

118. doubt] Clarke: In the first three lines ‘doubt’ is used in the sense of have a misgiving, have a half-belief, and in the fourth line, in the sense of disbelieve.

120. reckon] Delius: To number metrically, or scan.

123. to him] Caldecott: That is, belongs to, obeys his impulse; so long as he is a ‘sensible, warm motion,’ Meas. for Meas. III, i, 120. Clarendon: Hamlet’s letter is written in the affected language of euphuism. Compare Cym. V, v, 385.

124. Hamlet] Cambridge Editors: In Q4 and Q3 this word is by mistake printed not at the end of the letter, but opposite to the first line of Polonius’s speech. [A proof that Q4 was printed from Q3 or Q2. In these, the line: ‘Thine evermore
This in obedience hath my daughter shown me;
And more above, hath his solicitings,
As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Received his love?
Pol. What do you think of me?
King. As of a man faithful and honourable.
Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think,
When I had seen this hot love on the wing,—
As I perceived it, I must tell you that,
Before my daughter told me,—what might you,
Or my dear majesty, your queen here, think,
If I had play'd the desk or table-book, moft deere Lady, whilst this machine is to him,' filled up the breadth of the page, and 'Hamlet' was forced into the line below: (Hamlet. In Q4 the last line of the letter is merely 'machine is to him,' and although there was abundance of room for the insertion of 'Hamlet,' yet the printer followed copy and retained it in the line below. Q4 was printed from Q4 and kept up the blunder. Ed.]

125. more above] CALDECOTT perceives a difficulty in the grammar or construction in the reading both of FF and Q4. It is strange that he failed to see that 'hath' in this line is in the same construction as 'hath' in the preceding line.

126. by] ABBOTT, § 145: From meaning near, 'by' here seems to mean with. See II, ii, 186.

133. perceived] MOBERLY: There is much humor in the old man's inveterate foible for omniscience. He absurdly imagines that he had discerned for himself all the steps of Hamlet's love and madness; while of the former he had been unaware till warned by some friends; and the latter did not exist at all.

135. play'd] KEIGHTLEY: Perhaps ply'd, as pretending to be occupied.

135-137. WARBURTON: If either I had conveyed intelligence between them and been the confident of their amours; or had connived at it, only observed them in secret, without acquainting my daughter with my discovery; or, lastly, been negligent in observing the intrigue, and overlooked it; what would you have thought of me? MALONE: The first line may mean, if I had locked up this secret in my own breast, as closely as it were confined in a desk or table-book. MOBERLY paraphrases this same line: If I had just minutcd the matter down in my own mind.

ACT II, SC. ii.]

HAMLET

Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb,
Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;
What might you think? No, I went round to work,
And my young mistress thus I did bespeak:
'Lord Hamlet is a prince, out of thy star;
This must not be;' and then I prescripts gave her,
That she should lock herself from his resort,
Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
Which done, she took the fruits of my advice;
And he repulsed, a short tale to make,
Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,

139. my young mistress] In parenthesis, F

140. prince, out] prince:—out Steev.

138. round] STEEVENS: Roundly, without reserve, as in III, i, 183; III, iv, 5.

CALDECOTT: As here used, it cannot be more correctly interpreted than by the reverse of its literal meaning, i.e. without circuity. In this sense, and senses nearly allied to it, this word is used with great latitude. DYCCE (Gloss.) gives eight different uses of round. CLARENDO: The adjective is here used for the adverb, as in Bacon's Essay, vi: 'A shew of fearfullnesse, which in any businesse doth spoile the feathers, of round flying up to the mark.' See ABBOTT, § 60.

139. bespeak] For the use of the prefix be-, see ABBOTT, § 438.

140. star] BOSWELL: 'Out of thy star' is 'placed above thee by fortune.' We have 'fortune's star,' I, iv, 32. COLLIER: 'Star' is probably to be taken as destiny.

SINGER: In Twelfth Night, II, v, 156, we have 'in my stars I am above thee.' WHITE: Sphere is at once a plausible reading and a gloss. STAUNTON: Lord Hamlet is a prince beyond the influence of the star which governs your fortunes.

BAILEY (ii, 6): Substitute o for t, and you have 'out of thy soar.' It is not to be concealed that Sh. does not elsewhere employ soar as a noun.

141. prescripts] MALONE: He had ordered, charged, Ophelia to lock herself up from Hamlet; see I, iii, 135.

144. fruits] JOHNSON: She took the fruits of advice when she obeyed advice; the advice was then made fruitful.

146-150. WARBURTON: The ridicule of this character is here admirably sustained.
Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,
Thence to a lightness, and by this declension
Into the madness wherein now he raves
And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think 'tis this?
Queen. It may be, very likely.
Pol. Hath there been such a time, I'd fain know that,
That I have positively said 'tis so,'

He would not only be thought to have discovered this intrigue by his own sagacity, but to have remarked all the stages of Hamlet’s disorder, from his sadness to his raving, as regularly as his physician could have done; when all the while the madness was only feigned. The humor of this is exquisite from a man who tells us, with a confidence peculiar to small politicians, that he could find: ‘Where truth was hid, though it were hid indeed Within the centre.’

147. watch] CALDECOTT: A sleepless state.
147, 148. thence into...lightness] Although WALKER (Vers. 20) suggests that here ‘weakness’ and ‘lightness’ be pronounced as trisyllables, yet he adds: I rather suspect that we should write, ‘thence to a weakness, thence Into a lightness.’
ABBOTT, § 483, while conceding the possibility that ‘weakness’ is a trisyllable, yet thinks that ‘the repeated “thence” may require a pause after it, which might excuse the absence of an unaccented syllable.’

149. madness] CLARKE: Sh. intended Hamlet should be deeply moved by Ophelia’s unexplained repulse of him, coming immediately upon the shock he receives from the Ghost’s revelation, and he seizes upon the one as affording apparent cause for his disturbance of mind arising out of the other, and as giving plausible and ostensible ground for the madness which he assumes, and by which he wishes to be believed to have been seized. Polonius’s deduction and his report to the King and Queen of that, and Hamlet’s condition, are precisely what the prince desired should successively accrue from his own behaviour. This all appears to us to be in favor of our opinion with regard to Hamlet’s feigned insanity.

150. all we] ABBOTT, § 240: A feeling of the unemphatic nature of the nomatives we and they prevents us from saying ‘all we.’ [For another instance of a transposed pronoun, see V, ii, 14. Ed.]
150. for] DELIUS: The relative which must be supplied from the foregoing ‘wherein.’

151. this] CORSON: The reading of F*, ‘tis this,’ suits better what precedes, and the reply of the Queen that follows.
When it proved otherwise?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. [Pointing to his head and shoulder] Take this from this, if this be otherwise.

If circumstances lead me, I will find

Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed

Here in the lobby.

158. centre] Tschischwitz: Despite the reading of Q, I nevertheless believe that by 'centre' is meant the middle of the palm of the hand, a point important in palmistry. Clarendon: Sh., like Bacon, held to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy. See Tro. & Cret. I, iii, 85. Compare Tit. And. IV, iii, 12.

159. four] Malone: I formerly was inclined to adopt Tyrwhitt's proposed emendation of for [anticipated by Hanmer], but have now no doubt that the text is right. The expressions, 'four hours together,' 'two hours together,' &c., appear to have been common. So in Lear, I, ii, 170; Wint. T. V, ii, 148. Again in Webster's Duchess of Malfi [ed. Dyce 1, 261]: 'She will muse four hours together.' Collier (ed. 2): It is not likely that Polonius would specify precisely how long Hamlet walked in the lobby, and the (MS) reads for. White: The obvious reading for has occurred to many critical readers; and to modern taste this would seem an improvement. But similar phrases are of common occurrence in old books. Stauton: 'Four' here, as in Cor. I, vi, 84, and elsewhere, appears a mere colloquialism, to signify some, or a limited number, as forty is frequently used to express a great number. Clarendon: So in Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie (p. 307, ed. Arber): 'laughing and gibing with their familiars four and forty hours by the clocke.' Else (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, Bd. xi) has collected many instances from Elizabethan writers of the use of four and forty, and forty thousand to express an indefinite number, and probably, with his unwarried industry, he could find forty more. He also shows that this usage is not confined to England, but is common in German. Hamlet says he loved Ophelia more than 'forty thousand brothers,' V, i, 257.

His arrangement has been followed by all subsequent editors, till we ventured, in the Globe edition [anticipated by Grant White. Ed.] to recur to the old order. These words are more naturally addressed to Hamlet than to the King and Queen, with whom Polonius had been previously conversing. Dyce transferred the entrance of Hamlet to follow the Exeunt of the King and Queen,

Gifford, in his note on this passage in Jonson, says: 'This alludes to the prolific nature of fish. The jest, which, such as it is, is not unfrequent in our old dramatists, needs no further illustration.' Malone: Perhaps a joke was here intended. 'Fishmonger' was a cant term for a wench. In Barnabe Rich's Irish Hubub: 'Senex fornicator, an old fishmonger.' Coleridge: That is, you are sent to fish out this secret. This is Hamlet's own meaning. G. M. Zornlin (Sk. Soc. Papers, vol. iii, p. 157) supposes this word to have been used in a figurative sense, perhaps somewhat as we should now apply the word ferret, or as a dealer in baits, and that it contains an intimation that Hamlet was aware of Polonius's being engaged in some underhand policy, 'and that he knew Ophelia was to play her part in it is evident from the caution which follows respecting her, which the old man loses sight of in his joy at hearing his daughter alluded to.' Morely: Probably the meaning may be: 'You deal in wares that will not bear the sun.' That is, that Polonius has a daughter, and that all women are as faithless and unchaste as his mother, so that the least trial overthrows them. TIECK (Kritische Schriften, iii, 262): When this word is spoken the sense may be made so obvious that one can hardly miss it: 'I would you were so honest a man—but—you are a fleshmonger.' You are a pander, not so honest a man as a fishmonger. Hamlet casts in the teeth of Polonius that he made opportunities for him and his daughter, and the following speech: 'For if the sun,' &c. is only a continuation of the expression of Hamlet's contempt for both father and daughter. Friesen (Briefe über Hamlet, 1864, p. 287) supposes that this rather refers to Polonius's share in providing opportunities for Claudius and the Queen, during the old king's extraordinary proverb in his note on this passage in Appendix, Vol. II.

180. sun] Tschischwitz (Sh. Forsch. i, 63) finds a parallel to this thought in Giordano Bruno (vol. ii, 246), where the philosophy is taught that, ‘sol et homo generant hominem.’ Ingleby (Sh. Hermeneutics, p. 159) gives, as a curious illustration of Hamlet’s simile, a passage from St Augustine, De fide et symbolo, § 10:
Debent igitur intueri qui hoc putant, solis huius radios, quem certe non tanquam creaturam Dei laudant sed tanquam Deum adorant, per cloacarum foetores et quae-

181. good kissing carrion] Warburton: This strange passage, when set right, will be seen to contain as great and sublime a reflection as any the poet puts into his hero’s mouth throughout the whole play. We will first give the true reading, which is this: For if the Sun breed maggots in a dead dog, Being a God, kissing carrion—.
As to the sense, we may observe that the illative particle [for] shows the speaker to be reasoning from something he had said before; what that was we learn in these words, to be honest, as this world goes, is to be one picked out of ten thousand. Having said this, the chain of ideas led him to reflect upon the argument which libertinizes bring against Providence from the circumstance of abounding evil. In the next speech, therefore, he endeavors to answer that objection, and vindicate Providence, even on a supposition of the fact, that almost all men were wicked. His argument in the two lines in question is to this purpose: But why need we wonder at this abounding of evil? For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, which, though a God, yet shedding its heat and influence upon carrion—. Here he stops short, lest talking too consequentially the hearer should suspect his madness to be feigned, and so turns him off from the subject by enquiring of his daughter. But the inference which he intended to make was a very noble one, and to this purpose. If this (says he) be the case that the effect follows the thing operated upon [carrion], and not the thing operating [a God], why need we wonder that the supreme cause of all things diffusing its blessings on mankind, who is, as it were, a dead carrion, dead in original sin, man, instead of a proper return of duty, should breed only corruption and vices? This is the argument at length, and is as noble a one in behalf of Providence as could come from the schools of divinity. But this wonderful man had an art not only of acquainting the audience with what his actors say, but with what they think. The sentiment, too, is altogether in character, for Hamlet is perpetually moralizing, and his circumstances make this reflection very natural. The same thought, something diversified, as on a different occasion, Sh. uses again in [181. 'good kissing carrion."

Meas. for Meas. II, ii, 163-168, which will serve to confirm these observations, and the same kind of expression is in Cymb. III, iv, 164, 'Common-kissing Titan,' Johnson: This is a noble emendation, which almost sets the critic on a level with the author. Malone: Hamlet has just remarked that honesty is very rare in the world. To this Polonius assents. The prince then adds, that since there is so little virtue in the world, since corruption abounds everywhere, and maggots are bred by the sun, even in a dead dog, Polonius ought to take care to prevent his daughter from walking in the sun, lest she should prove a breeder of sinners; for, though conception in general be a blessing, yet as Ophelia (whom Hamlet supposes to be as frail as the rest of the world) might chance to conceive, it might be a calamity. The maggots breeding in a dead dog seem to have been mentioned merely to introduce the word conception, on which word, as Steevens has observed, Sh. has played in King Lear; and probably a similar quibble was intended here. The word, however, may have been used in its ordinary sense, for pregnancy, without any double meaning. The slight connection between this and the preceding passage and Hamlet's abrupt question, 'Have you a daughter?' were manifestly intended more strongly to impress Polonius with the belief of the prince's madness. Perhaps this passage ought rather to be regulated thus: 'being a god-kissing carrion,' i.e. a carrion that kisses the sun. The participle being naturally refers to the last antecedent, dog. Had Sh. intended that it should be referred to sun, he would probably have written, 'he being a god,' &c. We have many similar compound epithets in these plays. Thus, in Lear, II, i, 9, Curan speaks of 'ear-kissing arguments.' Again, more appositely, in the play before us, III, iv, 59, 'heaven-kissing.' Again, in R. of L. 1370, 'cloud-kissing.' However, the instance quoted from Cymb. by Warburton seems in favor of the regulation that has been hitherto made; for here we find the poet considered the sun as kissing the carrion, not the carrion as kissing the sun. So, also, in 1 Hen. IV: II, iv, 113, 'Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter?' The following lines, also, in the historical play of King Edward III, 1596, which Sh. had certainly seen, are, it must be acknowledged, adverse to the regulation I have suggested: 'The freshest summer's day doth soonest taint The loathed carrion, that it seems to kiss.' Whiter, whose opinions deserve respect, fails to make a clear explanation of the text of Q1F1, which he upholds. He says (p. 149) that Sh. considers the 'blessed breeding sun' as the Good principle in the fecundity of the earth, and that in the present passage the train of thought in Hamlet's mind is somewhat thus: There is so little honesty left in the world, the world has become so degenerate, that even what is bad becomes worse by contact with what is good. The Sun itself, though a Good, and in general the source of what is excellent, becomes the origin of corruption; we find this Good, by contact with carrion, breeding maggots. Why, therefore, may not Ophelia herself become tainted, and become a breeder of sinners? Let her not walk in the sun,—keep her removed from all possibility of contamination,—even from communication with those natures which in general appear possessed of good and virtuous principles. Dread the consequences of exposing her to the temptation of the world. Coleridge: These purposely obscure lines, I rather think, refer to some thought in Hamlet's mind, contrasting the lovely daughter with such a tedious old fool, her father, as he, Hamlet, represents Polonius to himself: 'Why, fool as he is, he is some degrees in rank above a dead dog's carcass; and if the sun, being a god that kisses carrion, can raise life out of a dead dog, why may not good fortune, that favors fools, have raised a lovely girl out of this dead-alive old fool? The subsequent passage, line 384, is confirmatory of my view of these lines. CALDECOTT: As it would be too forced a sense to say that Sh. calls the sun 'a good kissing carrion,' we have nothing better to offer than that this passage may mean that the dead dog is good for the sun, the breeder of maggots, to kiss for the purpose of causing putrefaction, and so conceiving or generating anything carrion-like, anything apt quickly to contract taint in the sunshine; good at catching or drawing the rays or kisses of 'common kissing Titan.' MITFORD (Gent. Maga. 1845): Read 'carrion-kissing god,' formed like heaven-kissing, cloud-kissing, &c. KNIGHT: The carrion is good at kissing, ready to return the kiss of the sun,—common kissing Titan,—and in the bitterness of his satire Hamlet associates the idea with the daughter of Polonius. COLLIER: 'Good' could hardly have been a misprint for God, as in the latter case it would most likely have been written with a capital letter. DELIAS (ed. i): Hamlet calls the dog, in which the sun breeds maggots, a good, kissing carrion, alluding to the confiding, fawning manner of the dog towards his master. If the sun breed maggots in the dead dog, which, when alive, was so trusting, what, says Hamlet in his bitterness and to annoy Polonius,—what could not the sun breed in the delicate Ophelia? who, therefore, ought not to expose herself to it. [This is omitted in the ed. of 1871. Ed.] DYCE: I give Warburton's emendation, which, if overpraised by Johnson, at least has the merit of conveying something like a meaning. That not even a tolerable sense can be tortured out of the original reading we have proof positive in the various explanations of it by its advocates. COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) evidently gave up the passage as inexplicable, and put his pen through the lines 180–185. MAGNIN (p. 246): Hamlet, in his affectation of craziness, proceeds to hint that the consequences of exposing a young lady to the temptations of persons in high rank, or of warm blood, may be dangerous, and couples the untrus assertion that the sun can breed maggots with a reference to Polonius's daughter. Let her not put herself in the peculiar danger to which I allude, and to which her father's performing the part of a fishmonger [i.e. a purveyor of loose fish] may lead. The sun is a good-kissing carrion,—[carogne—it is a word which occurs elsewhere in Sh. Quickly, in the Merry Wives, is called a carrion, &c.],—a baggage fond of kissing. In Hen. IV, Prince Hal compares the sun to a fair hot wench in flame-colored taffeta; and if the sun can breed maggots in a dead dog, who knows what may happen elsewhere? WHITE: The correction, which is almost of the obvious sort, was made by Warburton, who improved the occasion in a small sermon. This speech of Hamlet's has an intimate connection in thought and in expression with his next; the thought being one which his madness, real or affected, may excuse, but upon which it is not pleasant to dwell, much less to expatiate. STAUNTON: We adopt the now almost universally accepted correction of Warburton. At the same time we dissent, toto coelo, from the reasoning by which he and other commentators have sought to connect the sentence in which it occurs with what Hamlet had previously said. The circumstance of the prince coming in reading, that he evinces the utmost intolerance of the old courtier's interruptions, and rejoices in his departure, serve, in our opinion, to show that Sh. intended the actor should manifest his wish to be alone, after the lines 177, 178, in the most unmistakable manner, by walking away and appearing to resume his study; that then, finding Polonius still watching him, he should turn sharply round with the abrupt question, 'Have you a daughter?' It is this view of the stage business which prompted us to print the passage above [line 180. For . . . carrion] as something read, or affected to be read, by Hamlet,—an innovation—if it be one (for we are ignorant whether it has been suggested previously)—that will the more readily be pardoned, since the passage, as usually exhibited, has hitherto defied solution. Heussi: 'Kissing' is used in a passive sense; a contrast is drawn between carrion and bad men. The former is praised, because the dead dog is a carrion that fulfils all requirement of carrion, whereas men are inferior to that which they should be. Tschirschwitz: The meaning is clear. If the sun, a good being, condescends so far as to kiss, &c. [He therefore transposes the words in the text, 'being a good,' and reads a good being. Ed.] Hudson: God is probably right. A great deal of ink has been spent in trying to explain the passage; but the true explanation is, that it is not meant to be understood. Hamlet is merely bantering and tantalizing the old man. Moorerly: Warburton's explanation is excellent. Clarendon: There can be little doubt of the truth of Warburton's emendation. Corson: The defect in this passage is due to one thing, and one thing only, and that is, to the understanding of 'kissing' as the present active participle, and not as the verbal noun. In the following passages the present active participle is used: 'Life's but a walking shadow,' Macb. V, v, 24; 'Look, here comes a walking fire,' Lear, III, iv, 110; 'the dancing banners of the French,' King John, II, i, 308; 'my dancing soul doth celebrate This feast,' Rich. II: I, iii, 91; 'laboring art can never ransom nature,' All's Well, II, i, 116; 'more busy than the laboring spider,' 2 Hen. VI: III, i, 339; 'And let the laboring bark climb hills of seas,' Oth. II, i, 184; 'thy parting soul,' 1 Hen. VI: II, v, 115; 'parting guest,' Tro. & Cress. III, iii, 166; 'a falling fabric,' Cor. III, i, 247; 'this breathing world,' Rich. III: I, i, 21; 'O blessed breeding sun,' Tim. of Ath. IV, iii, 1. But in the following passages the same words are verbal nouns used adjectively: 'a palmer's walking-staff,' Rich. II: III, iii, 151; 'you and I are past our dancing days,' Rom. & Jul. I, v, 29; 'you ought not walk Upon a laboring day,' Jul. Cesar. I, i, 4; 'Give him that parting kiss,' Cymb. I, iii, 34; 'what store of parting tears were shed?' Rich. II: I, iv, 5; 'the falling sickness,' Jul. Cesar. I, ii, 252; 'scarce a breathing while,' Rich. III: I, iii, 60; 'it is the breathing time of day with me,' Ham. V, ii, 165. And now we are all ready for 'kissing.' In the following passages it is the participle: 'A kissing traitor,' Love's L. L. V, ii, 592; Cymb. III, iv, 164; 'O, how ripe in show Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow,' Mid. N. D. III, ii, 140. 'Kissing,' in the last passage, might be taken for the verbal noun, meaning, for kissing, or, to be kissed; but it must here be understood as the participle. Demetrius speaks of the lips of Helena as two ripe cherries that kiss, or lightly touch each other. But to say of a pair of beautiful lips, that they are good kissing lips, would convey quite a different meaning,—a meaning, however, which nobody would mistake; 'kissing,' in such expression, is the verbal noun used adjectively, and equivalent to 'for kissing.' And so the word is used in the present passage in Hamlet. That is, a dead dog being, not a carrion good at kissing (which would be the sense of the word as a present active participle), but a carrion good for kissing, or, to be kissed, by the sun, that thus breeds a plentiful crop of maggots therein, the agency of 'breed' being implied in 'kissing.' In reading this speech, the emphasis should be upon 'kissing,' and not upon 'carrion,' the idea of which last word is anticipated in 'dead dog;' in other words, 'kissing carrion' should be read as a compound noun, which, in fact, it is, the stress of sound falling on the member of the compound which bears the burden of the meaning. The two words might, indeed, be hyphenated, like 'Kissing-comfits,' in Merry Wives, V, v, 19. The life-awakening power of the sun is expressed in the following passages, which commentators have not quoted, I believe, in illustration of the passage in Hamlet: 'The fire That quickens Nilus' slime,' Ant. & Cleo. I, iii, 69; 'Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of the sun: so is your crocodile,' II, vii, 26. [This note is so exhaustive and so conclusive that, although the interpretation which it offers has been anticipated by Caldecott, I have nevertheless given it almost at full length. Ed.]

CORSON: He says what he does to make the old man uneasy, meaning that though conception is a blessing in the legitimate way, it wouldn't be as his daughter might conceive,—out of wedlock.

CALDECOTT: At this rate, and if it be true that lofty aims are no more than air, our beggars only have the nature of substance; and our monarchs and those who are blazoned so far abroad as to be thought materially to fill so much space, are, in fact, shadows, and in imagination only gigantic. HUDSON: Hamlet loses himself in the riddles he is making. The meaning, however, seems to be: our beggars can at least dream of being kings and heroes; and if the substance of such ambitious men is but a dream, and if a dream is but a shadow, then our kings and heroes are but the shadows of our beggars. BUCKNILL (p. 76): If ambition is but a shadow, something beyond ambition must be the substance from which it is thrown. If ambition, represented by a king, is a shadow, the antitype of ambition, represented by a beggar, must be the opposite of the shadow, that is, the substance. MOBERLY: If ambition is the shadow of pomp, and pomp the shadow of a man, then the only true substantial men are beggars, who are stript of all pomp and of all ambition.

279, 280. by...withal] TSCHISCHWITZ: The addition of 'withal' ought to have revealed to modern editors the error of the old text; no explanation is offered by them of the use of two prepositions for one object. It is evident that, after using 'by' three times, the climax is reached only by using it as a substantive in the last clause; the sense therefore is: 'with what more dear "by" a better proposer could charge you.' [Thus the pure English of William Shakespeare is amended by Benno Tschischwitz! Ed.]

280. proposer] CALDECOTT: An advocate of more address in shaping his aims, who could make a stronger appeal.

282. What say you?] DELIUS: Perhaps this question is addressed to Hamlet, in order to gain time and evade, if possible, a direct answer. Furthermore, I doubt if Sh. intended Hamlet's reply to be spoken as an Aside. Nowhere does Hamlet take much pains to conceal the distrust with which he regards these false friends, and he does not hesitate here to let them see that he has an eye on them.

283. an eye of you] STEVENS: A glimpse of your meaning. CALDECOTT: An eye upon or after you; a sharp lookout. ['Of' is used for on. See II, ii, 27. ED.]

286. prevent] CALDECOTT: That is, be beforehand with your discovery, and the plume and gloss of your secret pledge be in no feather shed or tarnished. CLAREN- DON: That is, anticipate, and so stop. HUDSON: Hamlet's fine sense of honor is well shown in this. He will not tempt them to any breach of confidence; by telling them the reason, he will forestall and prevent their disclosure of it.

286. STRACHEY (p. 53): This speech, like all others of the same kind throughout the rest of the play, is in prose. That the inferior interlocutors in the dialogue speak in prose also is, of course, sufficiently explained by the natural tendency of every man to carry on a conversation in the tone which the chief speaker gives it. But why Hamlet himself speaks prose is explained by comparing his prose with his verse speeches. We then find that he always returns to verse as the language of his practical life, whether in relation to feeling or to action; whereas, while he speaks prose, he is uttering the thoughts of the bystander and looker-on, contempla-ing, or aiming at contemplating, the world, with the cold passionless eye of the intellect. I say aiming at contemplating, for Hamlet is too young and ardent, and his griefs are too fresh, for his skepticism to become the real habit of his soul; and, accordingly, we see a bitter self-consciousness working up through it at every moment. Still, in as far as it is the looking on of a spectator, and not the participation of an actor, it is passionless, at least in form,—the reading out of a book, rather than the utterance of living speech.

whether literally or metaphorically. Here 'render your dis-closure needless by that he had been in continual practice since Laertes went into France.

291. promontory] Moberly: Thrust out into the dread ocean of the unknown, and as barren as the waves themselves.

292. brave o'erhanging] 'Walker (Crit. i, 38) thinks these words should be hyphened. The Folio's omission of 'firmament' probably originated in the similar commencements firmament, fretted.

293. firmament] Knight: Using 'o'erhanging' as a substantive, and omitting 'firmament,' the sentence is, perhaps, less eloquent, but more coherent. The air is the canopy; the o'erhanging; the mastigal roof. Here there are three distinct references to the common belief of the three regions of air. Ben Jonson, in his description of the scenery of the Masque of Hymen, has this passage: 'A corite of painted clouds...opening, revealed the three regions of air; in the highest of which sat Juno,...her feet reaching to the lowest, where was a rainbow, and within it airy spirits, their habits...resembling the several colors caused in that part of the air by reflection. The midst was all of dark and condensed clouds; &c. The canopy;
we believe, is the lowest region of colors caused by reflection; the o'erhanging;
the midst of dark and condensed clouds; the mastigal roof fretted,' &c., the highest, where Juno sat. The air, in its three regions, appears to Hamlet no other thing than a soul and pestilent congregation of vapors.' If this interpretation be it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! 295 how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving, how express and admirable! in action, how like an angel! in apprehension, how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! correct, the word ‘firmament,’ which is applied to the heavens generally, was rejected by Sh. as conveying an image unsuited to that idea of a part which is conveyed by the substantive, ‘derhanging.’

293. fretted] Malone: See Son. xxii. Clarendon: From A. S. fratwian, to adorn. Compare Camb. ii, iv, 88. ‘Fret’ is an architectural term, which Sh. employs in a looser sense. Bacon, in the following passage, uses it more strictly: ‘For if that great workmaster had been of an human disposition, he would have cast the stars into some pleasant and beautiful works and orders, like the frets in the roofs of houses; whereas one can scarce find a posture in square, or triangle, or straight line, amongst such an infinite number.’—Adv. of Learning, ii, 14, § 9.

295. man] Walker (Crit. i, 91) gives this, amongst others, as an instance of the interpolation of a in F, Dyce (ed. 2): The Qq have: ‘What piece of worke is a man,’—the ‘a’ having been shuffled out of its place. In the Ff, instead of the proper transposition, a second ‘a’ was inserted: ‘What a piece of worke is a man.’ The Quarto of 1637 has, ‘What a piece a worke is man!’ [See line 386.]

306. lenten] STEEVENS: Sparing, like the entertainments given in Lent.

COLLIER: Such entertainment as players met with in Lent, when they were often not allowed to perform. This explanation DYC (Gloss.) pronounces erroneous.

HALLIWELL: Our ancestors seem to have used this adjective constantly in a sense of deterioration. Cotgrave defines ‘Amoureux de caresme: A Lenten loster; a bashfull, modest, or maidenly woor; one that’s afraid to touch his mistress.’

307. coted] STEEVENS: Overtook. In The Return from Parnassus, 1606: ‘merry we presently coted and outstripst them.’ ‘In the laws of coursing,’ says Tollet, ‘a cote is when a greyhound goes endways by the side of his fellow, and gives the hare a turn.’

NARES: To pass by, to pass the side of another. It was a common sporting term. ‘Each man . . . notes Which dog first turns the hare, which first the other coasts.’—Drayton, Polyolb. xxiii, p. 1115. CALDECOTT cites from Golding’s translation of Ovid, Met. B, x: ‘With that Hippomenes coted her’ (where the original has ‘preterit’). DYC (Gloss.): Compare what Rosencrantz afterwards says of these players, III, i, 17: ‘certain players. We o’er-raught (overtook, overpassed) on the way.’

ANONYMOUS (New Shakespearian Interpretations. Edin. Rev. Oct. 1872): Cote, in the language of venery, is applied to a brace of greyhounds slipped together at the stag or hare, and means that one of the dogs outstrips the other and reaches the game first. Thus we find in T Burbville: ‘In coursing at a Deare, if one Greyhound go endways by [that is beyond] another, it is accoumpted a Cote.’ Again, ‘In coursing at the Hare, it is not materall which dog kyllet her (which hunters call bearing of an Hare), but he that giveth most Cotes, or most turnes, winneth the wager. A Cote is when a Greyhound goeth endways by his fellow and giveth the Hare a turn (which is called setting a Hare about), but if he coast and so come by his fellow, that is no Cote. Likewise, if one Greyhond doe go by another, and then be not able to reach the Hare himselfe and turne her, this is but stripping, and no Cote.’ To cote is thus not simply to overtake, but to overpass, to outstrip, this being the distinctive meaning of the term. Going beyond is the essential point, the term being usually applied under circumstances where outtaking is impossible,—to dogs who start together and run abreast until the cote takes place. So Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, having coted the players in their way, reach the palace first, and have been for some time in conversation with Hamlet before the strolling company arrives.
shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickle o' the sere,

312. humorous] CALDECOTT: The fretful or capricious man shall vent the whole of his spleen undisturbed. STAUNTON: Not the funny man, or jester,—he was termed 'the clown,'—but the actor who personated the fantastic characters, known in Shakespeare's time as 'humourists,' and who, for the most part, were represented as capricious and quarrelsome. DELIUS: Such characters as Faulconbridge, Jaques, and Mercutio. The 'clown' is next referred to.

313. tickle o' the sere] CAPELL (Glos.s.v. sere): Tickled, or delighted with the dry jokes of the character spoken of. STEEVENS: That is, those who are asthmatic, and to whom laughter is most uneasy. This is the case (I am told) with those whose lungs are tickled by the sere or serum. MALONE: The word 'sere' I am unable to explain, and suspect it to be corrupt. Perhaps we should read: 'tickled o' the scene,' i.e. by the scene. DOUCE: The same expression occurs in Howard's Discovering against the poysom of supposed prophericies, 1620: 'Discovering the moods and humors of the vulgar sort to be so loose and tickle of the sere,' &c., fol. 31. Every one has felt that dry tickling in the throat and lungs which excites coughing. Hamlet's meaning may be, 'the clown shall convert even their coughing into laughter.' WHITE: The whole speech is ironical, and here, as in his famous directions to the players, Hamlet is severest upon the Clown, who, he says, will have to be content with such semblance of laughter as comes from those who are tickled not by his jokes, but by a dry cough,—o' the sere. STAUNTON: Correctly, perhaps, 'tickle o' the sere.' It appears to signify those easily moved to the expression of mirth. HALLIWELL: Light of the sere is equivalent to light-heeled, loose in character. Tick of the sere, wanton, immodest. In the present passage it means those whose lungs are wanton, or excited to laughter by coarse ribaldry. See the following (cited by Steevens): 'She that ... will bylyde whysperynge in the eare, Thynke ye her tayle is not lyght of the sere.'—Commune Secretary and Jollowyse, n. d. [ed. Hindley, vol. i, p. 41]. NICHOLSON (N. & Qu. 22 July, 1871): The sere, or, as it is now spelt, sær (or scear) of a gun-lock is the bar or balance-level interposed between the trigger on the one side, and the tumbler and other mechanism on the other, and is so called from its acting the part of a sere, or talon, in gripping that mechanism and preventing its action. It is, in fact, a pawl or stop-catch. When the trigger is made to act on one end of it, the other end releases the tumbler, the mainspring acts, and the hammer, flint, or match falls. Hence Lombard (1596), as quoted in Halliwell's Archaic Dict., says, 'Even as a pistole that is ready charged and bent will flie off by-and-by, if a man do but touch the sær.' Now if the lock be so made of purpose, or be worn, or be faulty in construction, this sær, or grip, may be so tickle or ticklish in its adjustment that a slight touch or even jar may displace it, and then, of course, the gun goes off. Hence 'light,' or 'tick of the sær' (equivalent to, like a hair-trigger), applied metaphorically, means that which can be started into action at a mere touch, or on the slightest provocation, or on what ought to be no provocation at all. CLARENDON: The real meaning is just the reverse of 'those to whom laughter is most uneasy.' In old matchlock muskets the sear and trigger were in one piece. This is proved by a passage from Barrett's Theorike and Practice of Modern Warrens, 1598, p. 33 [35]: 'drawing down the serre with the other three fingers.' He has given directions for holding the stock between the thumb and forefinger. It is clear that Hamlet did not anticipate much from the wit of the clown, or from the players generally.

314. lady] Johnson: The lady shall have no obstruction, unless from the lameness of the verse. Henderson: The lady shall mar the measure of the verse rather than not express herself freely or fully. Seymour: If the lady, through affection of delicacy, should suppress anything, her omission will be detected in the lameness of the metre.

318. travel] Malone: A technical word, for which we have substituted stroll.
320. inhibition] 'What "inhibition"?' asks Theobald [Nichols, Lit. Hist. ii, 562]. 'If Rosencrantz meant to answer Hamlet's question closely, methinks it should be iteration.' This is not repeated in Theobald's ed. Johnson: Hamlet inquires not about an 'inhibition,' but an 'innovation;' the answer probably was:
—'I think their innovation,' that is, their new practice of strolling, 'comes by means of the late inhibition.' Steevens: Any change in the order of the words is quite unnecessary. Rosencrantz means that their permission to act any longer at an established house is taken away in consequence of the new custom of introcucing personal abuse into their comedies. Several companies of actors in the time of Sh. were silenced on account of this licentious practice. Malone: Sh. could not mean to charge his friends, the old tragedians, with the new custom of introcucing personal abuse, but rather must have meant, that the old tragedians were inhibited from performing in the city and obliged to travel on account of the misconduct of the younger company. And he could not have directed his satire at those young men who played occasionally at his own theatre. Jonson's Cynthia's Revels and Poetaster were performed there by the Children of Queen Elizabeth's chapel in 1600 and 1601; and Eastward Hoe by the Children of the Revels in 1604 or 1605.
I have no doubt, therefore, that the present dialogue was pointed at the choir boys of St Paul's, who in 1601 acted two of Marston's plays: Antonio and Mellida, and HAMLET

ACT II, SC. ii.

[320. 'inhibition.']

Antonio's Revenge. Many of Lyly's plays were represented by them about the same time; and, in 1607, Chapman's Bussy d'Ambois was performed by them with great applause. It was probably in this and some other noisy tragedies of the same kind that they 'cried out on the top of question, and were most tyrannically clapped for it.' The licentiousness of the stage is noticed in a letter from Mr Samuel Calvert to Mr Winwood, 28 March, 1605, which might lead us to infer that the words found only in the Folio were added at that time: 'The plays do not forbear to present upon the stage the whole course of this present time, not sparing the king, state, or religion, in so great absurdity and with such liberty that any would be afraid to hear them.'—Memorials, ii, 54. Or the words in the Folio might have been added in 1612, in which year Heywood's Apologie for Actors was published, containing the following passage, which leads us to infer that the little eyes were the persons guilty of the late innovation, or practice of introducing personal abuse on the stage: 'Now to speake of some abuse lately crept into the quality, as an inweighing against the State, the Court, the Law, the City, and their gouernemens, with the particularizing of private mens humors (yet alive) Noble-men & others. I know it distastes many; neither do I any way approue it, nor dare I by any means excuse it. The liberty which some arrogate to themselues, committing their bitterness, and liberall inuicities against all estates, to the mouthes of Children, supposing their juniority to be a priailedge for any rayling, be it neuer so violent, I could advise all such, to curbe and limit this presumed liberty within the bands of discretion and gouernment. But wise and juditious Censurers, before whom such complaints shall at any time hereafter come, wil not (I hope) impute these abuses to any transgression in vs, who haue euer been carefull and prudent to shun the like.' Caldecott thinks that they were obliged to travel because of the license granted to a new description of actors, who had met with the most extravagant applaudes and success. Collier says, that this passage probably refers to the limiting of public theatrical performances to the two theatres, the Globe on the Bankside, and the Fortune in Golden Lane, in 1600 and 1601. The players, by a 'late innovation,' were 'inhibited,' or forbidden, to act in or near 'the city,' and therefore travelled, or strolled, into the country. See Collier's Hist. of Engl. Dram. Poetry and the Stage, i, 311.

Clarendon doubts the validity of Steevens's explanation of the 'inhibition,' and thinks that the 'late innovation' does not clearly refer to the introduction of personal abuse on the stage, and adds the following conclusive note: For a very long period there had been a strong opposition in the city to theatrical performances. In March, 1573-4, the Lord Mayor and Corporation declined to license a place for them within the city. In 1575 players were again forbidden to act there, and in consequence, in 1576, the Blackfriars Theatre was built without the limits of the jurisdiction of the city. In 1581 the Lord Mayor was ordered to allow performances in the city by certain companies of actors on week days only, being holidays; but his inhibition must have remained still in force, because in the following year, 1582, the Lords of the Council pray the Lord Mayor to revoke his inhibition against playing on holidays. In 1589 Lord Burleigh appears to have directed the Lord Mayor to silence the players of the Lord Admiral's and the Lord Strange's companies for introducing matters of state and religion upon the stage. To this apparently Nash alludes in his Return of the renowned Cavaliero Pasquile of England, published in 1589. In this year, also, proposals were made to appoint two commissioners to act with the Master of the Revels for the purpose of examining and licensing every play, and so restraining the abuses of the actors. About the year 1590 the Children of St Paul's were silenced, and the interdict was apparently not removed till about 1600. In 1597 the Lord Admiral's players were restrained for a time from playing in consequence of having brought out Nash's _Isle of Dogs_, a play in which personal satire was probably introduced, and for which the author was imprisoned. In 1601 a letter was addressed by the Lords of the Council to certain justices of the Peace in the county of Middlesex in which the actors at the Curtain Theatre, Shoreditch, are charged with satirising living persons and introducing personalities into their plays. It is difficult, therefore, to see at what precise period the explanation offered by Steevens could be true. In 1604 the indulgence of the actors in personal abuse could hardly be called an 'innovation;' on the contrary, it was a practice from which the stage had never been entirely free. If we were to add to the conjectures upon this point, we should be disposed to suggest that the 'innovation' referred to was the license which had been given on 30 Jan. 1603-4 to the Children of the Queen's Revels to play at the Blackfriars Theatre and other convenient places. The Blackfriars Theatre belonged to the company of which Sh. was a member, formerly the Lord Chamberlain's and at this time His Majesty's servants. The popularity of the Children may well have driven the older actors into the country and so have operated as an 'inhibition,' though in the strict sense of the word no formal 'inhibition' was issued. If by 'inhibition' Sh. merely meant, as we think most probable, that the actors were practically thrown out of employment, it seems also likely that by 'innovation' he meant the authority given to the Children to act at the regularly licensed theatres. It must be borne in mind, in reference to this, that nothing is said either of 'inhibition' or 'innovation' in Q4, 1603, but that the sentence containing both is first introduced in Q2, 1604. It is to the interval, therefore, that we must look for the explanation. In offering this conjecture we have not lost sight of the fact that, after all, remembering how chary Sh. is of contemporary allusions, no special occurrence may be hinted at, although in what follows in the Folio edition a satire upon the Children's performances was clearly intended. In Chalmers's _Further Account of the Early English Stage_ (Var. '21, ii, 423-429) will be found a list of payments, at sundry times during the reign of Elizabeth, to the Children of Paul's, Westminster, Windsor, and the Chapel Royal, and an enumeration of the plays performed by them and by the Children of the Revels from 1571 to 1633. The quotation cited by Malone from Heywood shows, indeed, that the Children indulged in personalities, but not that any 'inhibition' was the consequence. Besides, it refers to a subsequent date. _Fleay (Sh. Manual, p. 41)_ : This is not necessarily to be applied to the first order of the Privy Council for the restraint of the immoderate use of playhouses (made 22 June, 1600), for this order proved ineffectual; but rather to their second order, made 31 Dec., 1601. _The Fortune_ and _The Globe_ were allowed to remain open; the others were closed, owing to the personal allusions indulged in by some of the companies. [See note III, ii, 267. Ed.]

325-345. Ham. How...load too.] Om. Pope, Caid.

327. aerie] Steevens: This refers to the young singing men of the chapel royal, or St Paul's, of the former of whom perhaps the earliest mention occurs in an anonymous Puritanical pamphlet, 1569, entitled The Children of the Chapel Stript and Whipt: 'Plaies will never be supprest, while her majesties unfledged minions flaunt it in silkes and sattens. They had as well be at their popish seruice in the deuils garments,' &c. Again, ibid: 'Euen in her majesties chapel do these pretty upstart youthes profane the Lordes day by the lascivious writhing of their tender limbs, and gorgeous deckeing of their apparell, in feigning bawdie fables gathered from the idolatrous heathen poets,' &c. Concerning the performances and success of the latter in attracting the best company, I also find the following passage in Jack Drum's Entertainment, or Pasquil and Katherine, 1601:

'I saw the children of Powles last night;
And truth they pleas'd me pretty, pretty well,
The apes, in time, will do it handsomely.
——I like the audience that frequen'th there
With much applause: a man shall not be chok'd
With the stench of garlick, nor be pasted
To the balmy jacket of a beer-brewer.
——Tis a good gentle audience,' &c.

It is said in Richard Flecknoe's Short Discourse of the English Stage, 1664, that 'both the children of the chappel and St Paul's, acted playes, the one in White-Frier's, the other behinde the Convocation-house in Paul's; till people growing more precise, and playes more licentious, the theatre of Paul's was quite supprest, and that of the children of the chappel converted to the use of the children of the revels.' Wedgwood: An eagle's nest. From French aire, an airie, or nest of haukes.—Cotgrave.

327. eyases] Dyce (Glos.): Young hawks, just taken from the nest. 'Niais: A nestling, a young bird taken out of a nest; hence a youngling, novice,' &c.—Cotgrave. Capell: These children were so called from their eagerness, and their flying at game above them.

328. top of question] Johnson: They ask a common question in the highest note of the voice. Steevens: Question here signifies conversation, dialogue. The meaning therefore is: Children that perpetually recite in the highest notes of voice that can be uttered. M. Mason: When we ask a question, we generally end the sentence with a high note. These children, therefore, declaim, through the whole of their parts, in the high note commonly used at the end of a question, and are applauded for it. Elze: 'Question,' as Steevens has said, means frequently in Sh conversation, dialogue. The 'top of the question' therefore means the top of con for't; these are now the fashion, and so berattle the common stages—so they call them—that many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills, and dare scarce come thither.

versation; namely, that point where the dialogue is most lively, where question and answer follow each other stroke on stroke, and the speakers are the most excited. These 'little eyases,' therefore, continually cry out as though they were at the very height of conversation. Staunton: The phrase, derived perhaps from the defiant crowing of a cock upon his midden, really meant, we believe, like—'Stood challenger on mount of all the age,' to crow over or challenge all comers to a contention. In line 424, Hamlet uses the phrase, 'cried in the top,' where it evidently means 'crowed over.' Again, in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, the author, alluding to fencers or players at single stick, talks of 'making them expert till they cry it up in the top of question.' [p. 55, Sh. Soc. vol. x.] White: To 'cry in the top' seems rather to mean to assume superiority;—as afterwards Hamlet, speaking of people who set him down about the play from which he quotes, says their judgments 'cried in the top' of his. I can conjecture no specific origin of the phrase. It might well have been formed on the mere general force of the words which compose it. Wellesley (Stray Notes, &c., 1865, p. 33): 'Question' is not conversation, dialogue, but the old word, still in use in other languages, for the rack. The pulleys were strained, and the witnesses hoisted to the utmost height, till the desired confession was elicited; and so the phrase, 'top of question,' came to be metaphorically applied; as, for instance, to the highest stretch of the voice or the utmost force of an argument. The top of the bent [III, ii, 367] was a phrase of the same kind, borrowed from those bows which were not bent by hand, but by a rack. 'These bows...were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used with others.'—Wilkins's Mathematical Magick. Dyce (Gloss.): Recite at the very highest pitch of the voice. Wellesley's explanation is wrong. Tschischwitz: I am convinced that this phrase in the MS was: that cry on the top, out of question; that is, they cry at the highest pitch of the voice, where it is wholly inappropriate. [And even so is the text amended. Ed.] Clarke: That is, pipe out their parts at the top of their shrill infantine voices. Clarendon: Probably, to speak in a high key, dominating conversation. For 'question' in this sense, see Mer. of Ven. IV, i, 70.

328. tyrannically] Caldecott: That is, receive outrageous, extravagant applause. Clarendon: The tyrant's part in the old plays was a noisy one. See Mid. N. D. I, ii, 31. Compare Beau. and Fl., The Knight of the Burning Pestle, V, i, 'And thou hast but seen little Ned of Aldgate, drum Ned, how he made it roar again, and laid on like a tyrant.'

329. fashion] Theobald (Sh. Rest. 67): The emendation of fashion we owe to Mr. Hughes; it implies that those children were not only in fashion, but had a fashion made by the town in their favor. [Has a copy of the edition by 'the accurate Mr. Hughes' ever been found? See Vol. II, p. 35. Ed.]

330. stages] Theobald (Sh. Rest. 67) conjectured stagers, that is, professed actors, to whom a degree of cowardice might be imputed, which Sh. would never have imputed to gentlemen spectators. Heath thought highly of this emendation although Theobald did not adopt it in his text.

331. goose-quills] Caldecott: Lampoons. Elze: This refers to 'the writers,'
Ham. What are they children? who maintains 'em? how are they escoted? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players,—as it is 335 most like, if their means are no better,—their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession?

in line 336. MOBERLY: These young hawks make such a noise on the common stage, that true dramatists, whose wit is as strong and keen as a rapier, are afraid to encounter these chits, who fight, as it were, with a goose-quill.

333. escoted] DYCE (Gloss.): Paid. 'Escot, A shot, ... Escotter, Every one to pay his shot, &c.—Cotgrave. TSCHISCHWITZ: It is very doubtful whether Sh. used so uncommon a word as 'escoted' when the common one, maintain, was ready to his use. 'I therefore believe that the true word is escoted.' THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 68) calls attention to what he calls the 'self-contradiction' here, in making Hamlet show a knowledge of their singing after 'he had professcd himself a stranger' to them.

333. quality] JOHNSON: Will they follow the profession of players no longer than they can keep the voices of boys? So also in line 412. MALONE: So in Gosson's Schole of Abuse (p. 39, ed. Arber), 1579: 'I speake not this, as though euery one [of our players] that professeth the qualitie so abused him selfe.' GIFFORD (Massinger's Roman Actor, Works ii, 339): 'Quality,' though used in a general sense for any occupation, calling, or condition of life, yet seems more peculiarly appropriated, by our old writers, to that of a player. See also The Picture, vol. iii, p. 141. CLARENDON: So in Two Gent. IV, i, 58, 'in our quality,' i.e. in our profession of brigands.

335. common players] STAUNTON: As we now term them, 'strolling players.' 'I prefix an epithite of common, to distinguish the base and artlesse appendants of our City companies, which often times start away into rustical wanderers, and then (like Proteus) start backe again into the City number.'—J. Stephens, Essays and Characters, 1615, p. 301.

338. to-do] HUDSON: This is the same as ado. CORSON: 'In place of this to-do, the King's English accepted a composition, part French, part English, and hence the substantive ado.'—Earle's Philology of the Engl. Tongue, ed. 2, p. 420.

338. both sides] TSCHISCHWITZ finds this speech obscure, because it seems as though it were a reply to what Hamlet has just said, whereas, so he says, it merely resumes the connection of thought which was broken by Hamlet's questions about the children. He therefore thinks that logic demands the insertion of Hamlet's speech, lines 332-337, after 'clapped for 't.'

339. tarre] NARES: To set on, and encourage in an attack, particularly in reference to dogs. WEDGWOOD: The origin seems to be an imitation of the sound of a dog snarling, used for the purpose of setting the animal on to fight.

340. argument] DELIUS: That is, the plot of the drama, which must be selected and treated in reference to the taste of the public, if the stage-directors *are to bid money for it; the public in the meanwhile only caring to see those dramas wherein the dialogue (the 'question') is well seasoned with warfare, 'cuffs.'

343. brains.] CALDECOTT: Sharp and nice discussion.

345. Hercules] WARBURTON: They not only carry away the world, but the world-bearer too; alluding to the story of Hercules relieving Atlas. STEEVES: The allusion may be to the Globe theatre, the sign of which was Hercules carrying the Globe. MALONE: I suppose Sh. meant that the boys drew greater audiences than the elder players of the Globe theatre. COLLIER (ed. 2): In Q, there are sufficient traces of this part of the scene to enable us to be certain that it was acted when the play was originally produced; it was omitted, therefore, for some unexplained reason in 1604, and restored entire in 1623.

346. strange] JOHNSON: I do not wonder that the new players have so suddenly risen to reputation; my uncle supplies another example of the facility with which honor is conferred upon new claimants.

347. mows] NARES: A distortion of the face, made in ridicule. See Cymb. i, vi, 41, and Psalm xxv, 15, old ed. [now erroneously changed to 'mouths.']—CLARENDO. CLARENDO: In Mid. N. D. III, ii, 238, we have 'mouths.' In fact, in the phrase 'to make mouths,' 'mouths' is a corruption of 'mows,' the original word. See also IV, iv, 50.

353. appurtenance] CLARENDON: Proper accompaniment.
354. comply with] STEEVENS: This is again apparently used in the sense of to compliment in V, ii, 178. CALDECOTT: That is, compliantly assume this dress and fashion of behaviour. SINGER: Hamlet has received his old school-fellows with somewhat of the coldness of suspicion hitherto, but he now remembers that this is not courteous. He, therefore, rouses himself to give them a proper reception:

‘Come, then, the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony; let me embrace you in this fashion, lest,’ &c. That to comply with was to embrace will appear from the following passages in Herrick: ‘——witty Ovid, by Whom faire Corinna sits; and doth comply With Yvorie wrists, his Laureat Head,’ &c.—[Hesperides, p. 279, ed. 1846]; also, ‘And then a Rug of carded wooll, Which, . . . seem’d to comply, Cloudlike the daintie Deitie.’—[ib. p. 224.] WHITE: In my judgement ‘comply with’ (not ‘comply’ alone) has here, and in V, ii, 178, merely the sense of ‘compliment.’ STAUNTON: Let me fraternise or conjoin with you in the customary mode; not ‘Let me compliment.’ To comply literally means to enfold. CLARENDON: Use ceremony with you in this fashion. [An interpretation which applies equally well to V, ii, 178.]

354. this garb] CORSON: The reading of the Ff makes the better sense, where ‘the’ is used generically.
355. extent] CALDECOTT: The degree of courtesy dealt out. COLLIER (ed. 2): Is there not room to doubt here whether ‘extent’ has not been misprinted for extent, a word Sh. not unfrequently uses in the sense of external show? We have no authority for the change, but the word ‘extent’ is not very intelligible here, though it may be reconciled to a meaning. CLARENDON: Condescension; the behaviour of a superior to an inferior when he makes the first advances. See ‘extend’ in All’s Well, III, vi, 73.
than yours. You are welcome; but my uncle-father and 357 aunt-mother are deceived.

_Gul._ In what, my dear lord?

_Ham._ I am but mad north-north-west; when the wind 360 is southerly, I know a hawk from a handsaw.

358. _aunt-mother_ Daniel (p. 75): Read _mother-aunt_. Hamlet's mother had become his aunt, just as his uncle had become his father.

360. _north-north-west_ Francke: Perhaps the meaning is: Great, powerful tempests in the moral world; apparitions from the mysterious Hereafter, can make me mad, can crush my reason; but such people as you are, who come around me with sweet phrases and mock friendship, I have yet wit enough to elude.

361. _handsaw_ Warburton: Hamner's alteration serves to show us the origin of the proverb which was a common one in Shakespeare's day. CaPELL (i, 133): The speaker's meaning is that opportunity did not serve for his purpose; when it did, it would be seen he had his right senses. _Nares_: _Hernshaw, heronshaw_, or _hernshaw_ is a heron or herm. 'As when a cast of falcons make their flight, at an heronshaw, that lyes aloft on wing.'—Spenser, _Faerie Queene_, VI, vii, 9. 'To know a hawk from a heron,' was certainly the original form of the proverb. But the corruption had taken place before the time of Sh. It is _handsaw_ in Ray's _Proverbs_, p. 196, ed. 1768. White: I suspect that in Shakespeare's time the corrupted phrase had, to general acceptance, lost its original meaning, and that the comparison was supposed to be between the tool called a hawk and a handsaw. There was, and I believe there still is, a hooked cutting tool called a hawk. Halliwell: No evidence in support of the supposition that 'handsaw' is a corruption of _hernshaw_ has been produced; the phrase always occurs in this form. It is not necessary to believe that the supposition is correct, the wildest incongruities being often found in proverbial phrases of this description. It is suggested by C. W. H. in the _Athenaeum_ (30 December, 1865), that Sh. might have become acquainted, through North's _Plutarch_, with the significations attached by the Egyptians to the hawk and heron respectively,—the former was the emblem of the North wind, and the latter of the South wind. 'Hamlet, though feigning madness, yet claims sufficient sanity to distinguish a hawk from a hernshaw when the wind is southerly; that is, in the time of the migration of the latter to the north, when the former is not to be seen.' J. A. G. _N. & Q._ 6 July, 1867) suggests _anser_, 'the generic name for our domestic waterfowl.' J. A. Picton _N. & Q._ 30 Nov, 1872) suggests that 'hawk' may refer, not only to the bill-hook, mentioned by White, but also to a plasterer's instrument so named. Clarendon: In Suffolk and Norfolk 'hernew' is pronounced 'harness,' from which to 'handsaw' is but a single step. For the following explanation of the earlier part of this obscure passage, we are indebted to Mr J. C. Heath, formerly Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge: 'The expression obviously refers to the sport of hawking. Most birds, especially one of heavy flight like the heron, when roused by the falconer or his dog, would fly down or with the wind, in order to escape. When the wind is from the north, the heron flies towards the south, and the spectator may be dazzled by the sun, and be unable to distinguish the hawk from the heron. On the other hand, when the wind is southerly, the heron flies towards the north, and it and the pursuing hawk are clearly seen by the sportsman, who then has his back to the sun, and without difficulty knows the hawk from the heron. A curious reader may further observe that a wind from the precise point north-north-west would be in the eye of the sun at half-past ten in the forenoon, a likely time for hawking, whereas "southerly" includes a wider range of wind for a good view; [I have heard the emendation suggested of handschuh, the German for glove, but cannot remember that I have ever seen it in print. Heath's explanation sets the question at rest, if 'handsaw' be a corruption of herneu. Ed.]

373. actor] TschiSWITZ: The fun here consists in Hamlet's mentioning an actor before the officious Polonius can utter the word.
375. Buz] Johnson: Mere idle talk, the bus of the vulgar. Steevens: Only interjections employed to interrupt Polonius. Jonson uses them often for the same purpose, as well as Middleton in A Mad World, my Masters. Blackstone: It was an interjection used at Oxford, when any one began a story that was generally known before. Douce (ii, 231): This expression may continue to exercise the skill of the critics, if they are disposed to pursue the game through the following mazes: 'Anno DCCCXL Ludovicus imperator ad mortem infirmatur, cujus cibus per XL dies solummodo die dominica dominicum corpus fecit. Cum vidisset daemonem astare, dixit buse, buse, quod significat foras, foras.'—Alberici monachi trium fontium Chronicon, Leips. 1698. Ducange, under the article Buz, says, 'Interpretatur despectus vel contemptus. Papias (Ab Hebraico Bus vel bous, sprevit).'
377. Then...ass] Johnson: This seems to be the line of a ballad. Elze: At all events, it contains biting ridicule of Polonius, who has just said that 'The actors are come hither—upon my honour!'
381. indivisible] Delius: This refers to dramas that carefully observed the Unity of Place; 'poem unlimited' refers to those that disregarded such restrictions. TschiSWITZ: In the license granted in 1603 to the Globe Company, permission is given 'freely to use and exercise the Arte and facultie of playing Comedies, Tragedies, Histories, Enterludes, Moralls, Pastoralls, Stage plaies & such other like.' To this last description, 'stage plaies,' I suppose the 'poem unlimited' belonged, which, I presume, was an extemporised piece.
381. Seneca... Plautus] Steevens: The tragedies of Seneca were translated into English by Thomas Newton and others, and published first separate, at different times, and afterwards all together in 1581. One comedy of Plautus, viz. the Menachmi, was likewise translated and published in 1595. Prefixed to a map of Cambridge, in the Second Part of Braunii Civitates, &c., is an account of the University, by Gulielmus Soounus, 1575. In this curious memoir we have the following passage: 'Januariam, Februriam, et Martium menses, ut nocis tædix fallant in spectaculis populo exhibendis ponunt tanta elegantia, tanta actionis dignitate, ea cvoci et vultus moderatone, ea magnificentia, ut si Plautus, aut Terentius, aut Senecas revivisceret mirarentur suas ipsi fabulas, majoremque quam cum inspectante popul.

Rom. agerentur, volupatem credo caperent. [See III, ii, 93.]

382. writ . . . liberty] CAPELL (i, 133): This means, pieces written in rule, and pieces out of rule. MALONE: 'Writ' is used for writing by Shakespeare's contemporaries. Thus, in The Apologie of Pierie Pennillesse, by Nashe, 1593: 'For the crassie circumstance of his poverty before his death, and sending that miserable writte to his wife,' &c. Again, in Bishop Earle's Character of a mere dull Physician, 1638:
'Then follows a writ to his druggier in a strange tongue,' &c. CALDECOTT: 'For the observance of the rules of the drama, while they take such liberties as are allowable, they are the only men.' COILLER: The meaning probably is, that the players were good, whether at written productions or at extemporal plays, where liberty was allowed to the performers to invent the dialogue, in imitation of the Italian commedie al improviso.
'Writ' for composition is not English. It is as if we should say, the laws of poem for the laws of poetry, or talk of so and so being contrary to the genius of ode, meaning the genius of lyrical composition. The passages quoted by the Var. commentators are utterly irrelevant. The same erratum occurs, Jut. Cat. III, ii, 225: 'For I have neyther writ nor words, nor worth.' CLARENDON: Probably the author did not intend that we should find a distinct meaning in Polonius's words. CORSON: The Qq and FF connect in construction, 'for the law of writ and the liberty,' with Seneca and Plautus, and not with 'these are the only men,' which evidently refers to the actors he's talking about. 'Liberty' should be construed with 'law;' the law and the liberty of writ [writing]. And 'law' and 'liberty' seem to refer, respectively, to 'heavy' and 'light.' This respective construction is frequent in Sh. See

384. Jephthah] STEEVENS communicated to Dr PERCY the old song from which Hamlet quotes, and it appeared in the second edition of Percy's Reliques in 1757.
There are two entries of this ballad on the Registers of the Stationers' Company: in 1567-
68, 'Alexandre lacaye' was licensed to print 'a ballet intituled the songe of JESPAS

Dowgther at his death.’ [Arber’s Transcript, i, 355. ‘His death’ is a clerical error for ‘her death.’ Collier, in vol. xiii, p. 169, Sh. Soc. Publications, seems to doubt if this be the same ballad as that quoted by Hamlet. ED.] The second entry is ‘Jefa Judge of Israel,’ p. 93, vol. iii, Dec. 14, 1624. Halliwell gives a facsimile of ‘A proper new ballad, intituled, Jepha Judge of Israe,’ of which the first stanza runs as follows:

‘I read that many yeares agoe,
When Jepha Judge of Israel,
Had one fair Daughter and no more,
whom he loved so passing well,
And as by lot God wot,
It came to passe most like it was,
Great warrs there should be,
and who should be the chiefe, but he, but he.’

Copies of this ballad differ slightly from each other, says Halliwell. Malone refers to Latin tragedies on this subject by Christopherson, 1546, and by Buchanan, 1554, and thinks it had probably been introduced on the English stage. CCollier shows from Henslowe’s Diary (pp. 220, 221, 222, and 223) that, in 1602, Dekker and Chettle were paid for a tragedy they were writing on the story of Jephthah, and that the subject, therefore, was popularly known by means of ballads and the stage.

399. It came to pass] MOBERLY: 'As he had a daughter, of course he got into a scrape,' is the inference suggested.

400. pious chanson] POPE explained the reading of F, as the name of 'old ballads sung on bridges.' STEEVENS defines 'pious chansons' as ballads containing some scriptural history, sung about the streets, and the 'first row' is the first column of the roughly printed sheet. NARES thinks the reading of the F apparently nonsense. Shakespeare intended, perhaps, to mix French and English, but both seem to have been corrupted by the players and printers. SINGER (ed. 1) really decides the question by an appeal to Q, where the corresponding phrase is 'the first verfe of the godly Ballet' [line 1016]. But HUNTER (New Illust. ii, 232) opened the question again by advocating the reading of the F, on the score of its being the latest intention of the poet, and the proper one. * In fact, in France, the trivial ballad, such as that referred to, is called in ordinary discourse a pons chanson, or a chanson du Pont Neuf. "Vaudevilles, ou Chanson du Pont Neuf, les chansons communes qui se chantent parmi le peuple avec une grande facilité, et sans art: Trivialis cantilena."—Dictionnaire de Trevoux, s. v. Chanson.' In reply to Hunter, KNIGHT [ap. DYCK] pertinently asks: 'A popular ballad is called even in modern dictionaries a chanson du Pont Neuf—but where is the authority for Pons Chanson P' [According to LITTRÉ, the secondary meaning of Pont Neuf is: 'Chanson populaire sur un air très-connu, e.g. Il sait tous les ponts-neufs qui courent les rues.' (In this sense it is not printed with capital letters.) But nowhere does he give such a phrase as pons chansons nor chanson, used absolutely when meaning the specific chansons du pont-neuf. ED.]

401. my] HUNTER (New Illust. ii, 233): 'My' does not necessarily refer back to the speaker, but may be used ethically. CORSON: It is so used in the F reading; in that of the Qq it is used objectively.

401. abridgements] JOHNSON: He calls the players afterwards [line 507] the brief chronicles of the time; but I think he now means: those who will shorten my talk. STEEVENS (Note on Mid. N. D. V, i, 39): By abridgement Sh. may mean a dramatic performance, which crowds the events of years into a few hours. DYCK (Gloss.): In this place it is applied to the players, as being, I presume, the persons who represent an abridgement. CLARENDON: Hamlet uses the word in a double sense. The players by entering abridge his talk.

STAUNTON: Compare the advice of Iago to Roderigo;— 'Follow thou the wars; defeat thy favour with an usurped beard,' t. e. assume a martial aspect; and also the context in Hamlet's speech, 'comest thou to beard me in Denmark?' where the point is lost without the fierceness implied by 'valiant.' CLARENDON: 'Valiant' is probably a mere misprint. WEDGWOOD: Supposed to be from the stuff having been made at Valencia

406. ladyship] CLARENDON: In Shakespeare's time, and till after the restoration of Charles II, female parts were played by boys. (Compare Two Gent. IV, iv, 165.) Probably the first woman who ever appeared on the English stage played Desdemona, on Saturday, 6 December, 1660. [Who that actress was has not been ascertained; a Mrs Hughes acted this part, in this company, in 1663, and to her may belong the honour; although the received tradition is that it is due to Mrs Saunderson, afterwards Mrs Betterton. The gross absurdity of entrusting to boys, and even to men, the rôles of women is well hit off in the doggerel! Prologue, to introduce the first woman that came to act on the stage:"

'Our women are defective, and so sized You'd think they were some of the guard disguised:
For, to speak truth, men act, that are between Forty and fifty, wenches of fifteen;
With bone so large, and nerve so incompliant,
When you call Desdemona, enter Giant.'

The apology was once made to Charles II for unpunctuality in beginning a play, that 'the queen was not shaved.' See Var. of 1621, vol. iii, p. 129. Ed.]

407. chopine] THEELWALL (Grey's Notes, &c., ii, 291) thinks this is the Scoten word for a quart measure. Vide JAMIESON, s. v. Chopin. REED: Tom Coryat, in hisCrudities, 1611, p. 262, calls them choprines, and gives the following account of them: 'There is one thing used of the Venetian women, and some others dwelling in the cities and towns subject to the signiory of Venice, that is not to be observed (I thinke) amongst any other women in Christendome: which is common God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring.—Masters, you are all welcome.

in Venice, that no woman whatsoever goeth without it, either in her house or abroad, a thing made of wood and covered with leather of sundry colors, some with white, some redde, some yellow. It is called a chapiney, which they wear under their shoes. Many of them are curiously painted; some also of them I have seen fairely gilt: so uncomely a thing (in my opinion) that it is pitty this foolish custom is not cleane banished and exterminated out of the citie. There are many of these chapineys of a great height, even half a yard high, which maketh many of their women that are very short, seeme much taller than the tallest women we have in England. Also I have heard it observed among them, that by how much the nobler a woman is, by so much the higher are her chapineys. All their gentlewomen and most of their wives and widowes that are of any wealth, are assisted and supported eyther by men or women, when they walke abroad, to the end they may not fall. They are borne up most commonly by the left arme, otherwise they might quickly take a fall.' Malone: Minshew defines 'Chapin de muger, a womans shoes, such as they use in Spaine, mules, or high corke shoes.' There is no synonynous word in the Italian. Boswell said that chopine is in Veneroni's Dictionary, but Dyce (Gloss.) says that none of the Italian Dictionaries in his possession contain the word. [It is not in Baretti. Singer says that it is recorded under the title of sesto, which, however, means simply a sandal, or patten.]

Douc: In Raymond's Voyage through Italy, 1648, we find: 'This place [Venice] is much frequented by the walking may poles, I mean the women. They wear their coats halfe too long for their bodies, being mounted on their chippeens, (which are as high as a man's leg), they walke between two handmaids, majestickly deliberating of every step they take. This fashion was invented and appropriated to the noble Venetian wives, to bee constant to distinguish them from the courtesans, who goe covered in a vaile of white taffety.' The chopine, or some kind of high shoe, was occasionally used in England. Bulwer, in his Artificial Changeling [1653], complains of this fashion as a monstrous affectation, and says that his countrywomen therein imitated the Venetian and Persian ladies. In Sandys's travels, 1615, there is a figure of a Turkish lady with chopines; it is not improbable that the Venetians borrowed them from the Greek Islands. Singer: Perhaps Hamlet may have some allusion to the boy having grown so as to fill the place of a tragedy heroine, and so assumed the cothurnus; which Puttenham described as 'high corked shoes, or pantofles, which now they call in Spaine and Italy Shoppini.' [Singer misunderstood the passage in Puttenham (see Arber's Rep. p. 49), which is as follows: 'the actors [of the parts of great Princes] ware vpon their legges buskins of leather called Cothurni, and other solemne habits, and for a speciall preheminence did walke vpon those high corked shoes or pantoffles, which,' &c. At a Jewish wedding in Jerusalem at which I was present, in 1856, the young bride, aged twelve, wore chopines at least ten inches high. Ed.]

409. ring] Johnson: Cracked too much for use. Douc: There was a ring on the coin, within which the sovereign's head was placed; if the crack extended from the edge beyond this ring, the coin was rendered unfit for currency. [To the same effect, also, Gifford, note on Jonson's The Magnetic Lady, Works, vol. vi. p. 76.] Such pieces were hoarded by the usurers of the time and lent out as lawful money.

Thus, Roger Fenton, in his Treatise of Usury, 1611, p. 23: A poore man desireth a

This is usuari.' And again, 'It is a common custome of his [the user's] to buy up crackt angels at nine shillings the piece. Now sir, if a gentleman (on good assurance) request him of mony, Good sir, (saith hee, with a counterfait sigh) I would be glad to please your worship, but my good mony is abroad, and that I have, I dare not put in your hands. The gentleman thinking this conscience, where it is subtilty, and being beside that in some necessity, ventures on the crackt angels, some of which cannot file, for soldering, and paises double interest to the miser under the cloak of honesty.'—Lodge's Wit's Miserie, 1596. CALDECOTT: Another sense is also meant: a voice broken in consequence of licentious indulgence.

410. French] CAPELL (i, 133): The French are remarkably irregular in all feats of sporting even at this day. STEEVENS: Toilet mentions that Sir Thomas Browne (Miscellany Tracts, p. 116) says that 'the French seem to have been the first and noblest falconers in the western part of Europe,' and afterwards (p. 118), adds CLARENDON, he (Sir Thomas Browne) mentions a falcon of Henry of Navarre, which Scaliger saith, he saw strike down a buzzard, two wild geese, divers kites, a crane and a swan. 'The phrase here, "fly at any thing we see," may not, therefore, have been intended to express contempt.'

414. me] An ethical dative, like 'inquire me first what Danskers,' &c., II, i, 6; also compare ROM. & JUL. III, i, 6: 'he claps me his sword.' SCHMIDT (Lex. s. v. 'I') says of this dative, that although superfluous as to the general sense, it imparts a lively color to the expression. MÄTZNER (ii, 211), with keener analysis, defines it as a personal pronoun of the first or second person, used, in familiar or jocose style, to denote the subjective interest which the speaker or the person addressed feels in some allusion to a circumstance which objectively is regarded as accomplished independently of that interest. See also V, i, 157.

416. caviare] REED: Giles Fletcher, in his Russe Commonwealth, 1591, says, in but it was,—as I received it, and others, whose judgements 417 in such matters cried in the top of mine,—an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said there were no sallets in 420

Russia they have 'divers kinds of fish: the Bellouga and Bellouginga,... the Ositrina and Sturgeon,... Of the roes of these four kinds they make very great store of Icary or Caviary.' RITSON (Remarks, &c., p. 199): Hamlet means that the play, like the pickled sturgeon, was a delicacy for which the multitude has no relish.
Douce (Illustr. &c., ii, 236): This word has been frequently mispronounced caver on the stage; but the following line from Sir J. Harrington's 33d Epigram, book iii, leaves no uncertainty in the matter: 'And câvèrè, but it little boots....' Caviar was formerly a considerable article of commerce between England and Russia.
NARES: In Shakespeare's time it was a new and fashionable delicacy, not obtained nor relished by the vulgar, and therefore used by him to signify anything above their comprehension.

416. the general] MALONE: Lord Clarendon (Book v, p. 530) uses this word to signify 'the people' in the same manner it is used here. CALDECOTT: In Galateo of Manners, p. 29, 1576, we have the moste used in the same sense.

418. cried in the top] WARBURTON: That is, whose judgement I had the highest opinion of. JOHNSON: I think it means only, that were higher than mine. HEATH:
Whose judgement, in such matters, was in much higher vogue than mine. STEEVENS:
Perhaps it means only: whose judgement was more clamorously delivered than mine.
We still say of a bawling actor, that he speaks on the top of his voice. HENLEY:
To over-top is a hunting term applied to a dog when he gives more tongue than the rest of the cry. To this, I believe, Hamlet refers, and he afterwards mentions a cry of players. CALDECOTT: Proclaimed not merely in addition to my voice and censure, but with a tone of authority that mine could not sound. CLARENDON: Henley's explanation of the metaphor is probably right. But it is the superior authority or value of the judgements, not the greater loudness with which they were delivered, that is indicated here.

419 modesty] WARBURTON: Simplicity. DYCE (Gloss.): Moderation. TSCHISCH-WITZ: In rhetorical phraseology, 'modesty' is eîraφia. CIC. De Off. lib. i, x, 142, ed. Orelli: 'Sed illa est eîraφia, in qua intelligitur ordinis conservatio. Itaque, can-dem nos modestiam apellemus, sed definitur a Stoicis, ut modestia sit *scientia resum earum qua agerentur aut dixerunt, loco sua collocandarum.' Thus, also, 'modesty of nature' [III, ii, 18] means that symmetrical harmony by which the acts of everyday life are made to fit the situation, that temperance and smoothness in the very torrent, tempest, and the whirlwind of passion to which modesty can be applied, as in Pliny, vi, 20, 71: modestia quedam aquarium. Did Sh. really not understand Latin?

420. sallets] HEATH: This is spoken in approbation, not in disparagement, of the play. The sense is: it wanted the high seasoning of loose ribaldry and luscious the lines to make the matter savoury, nor no matter in the phrase that might indict the author of affection; but called it an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved; 'twas Æneas's tale to Dido; and thereabout of it es-double meanings. GIFFORD defends Pope's reading, on the strength of a line in one of Jonson's Epigrams (Works, vol. viii, p. 177): 'I have no salt, no bawdry he doth mean;' and pronounces 'sallets' as akin to nonsense. SINGER: 'Salt' was probably intended. 'Salt, a pleasant and merrie word, that maketh folks to laugh, and sometimes pricke them.'—Baret.

DYCE: In spite of Gifford's note, I think the alteration to salt a hasty one—'sallets,' i.e. salt (ribald) words and allusions (see Richardson's Dictionary for the etymology of salad or sallet). COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) has 'salt,' perhaps wrongly, though sallets or salads seems not easily understood. The allusion may have been particular and temporary. CLARENDON: Pope was probably not aware that fragrant and piquant herbs were mixed with the salad.

422. *indict *... affection] STEEVENS: That is, convict the author of being a fantastical, affected writer. In Love's Lab. V i, 4, 'witty without affection, i.e. affectionation. Malvolio is called 'an affectioned ass in Twelfth Night, ii, iii, 160. CALDECOTT: From the use of the Latin, it seems that the English word was first introduced. 'Thy manner of wrytynge is dark with over moche curysyte. Stylus tuus affectioe obscuration nimia.'—Horman's Vulgaria, 1530.

424. handsome than fine] DELIUS: 'Handsone' denotes genuine, natural beauty—'fine,' artistic, labored beauty. CLARKE: In this passage [from line 420] Sh. is, in his own subtle vein of quiet hum., satirising the foppery of give-and-take criticism.

425. thereabout] CLARENDON: A substantive, like 'wherewithal,' in Macb. ii, i. 58.

425. THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. p. 72): I should suspect this play referred to by Hamlet to be Shakespeare's from one reason only; and that is, from its subject. There is scarce a play throughout all his works, in which it was possible to introduce the mention of them, where he has not by simile, allusion, or otherwise, hinted at the Trojan affairs; so fond was he of that story. POPE (ed. 2): This whole speech of Hamlet is purely ironical; he seems to commend this play to expose the bombast of it. Who was its author is not come to my knowledge. WARBURTON: I think that Hamlet spoke with commendation to upbraid the false taste of the audience of that time, which would not suffer them to do justice to the simplicity and the sublime of this production. And 1 reason, first, from the character Hamlet gives of the play from whence the passage is taken. Secondly, from the passage itself. And, thirdly, from the effect it had on the audience. First, they who suppose the passage was given in order to be ridiculed must needs suppose that what Hamlet says in lines 418-426 was purely ironical, and the strangest irony ever was written. 'It pleased not the multitude.' This we must conclude to be true, however ironical the rest be. Now the reason given of the designed ridicule is the supposed bombast. Whereas bombast, we know, at that time took with the multitude. But Hamlet tells why it displeased them: that there was no salt in the lines, nor affected style. Now it could not be, if this play displeased on account of the bombast, that they whom it displeased should give this reason for their dislike. All these inconsistencies disappear if we take Hamlet as speaking his genuine sentiments, as thus: The play, I remember, pleased not the multitude, and the reason was its being written on the rules of the ancient drama; to which they were entire strangers. But in my opinion and in that of others of better judgement than mine, it was an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, i.e. where the three unities were well preserved. Set down with as much modesty as cunning, i.e. where not only the art of composition, but the simplicity of nature, was carefully attended to. But these qualities, which gained my esteem, lost the public's. For I remember, one said, There was no salt in the lines to make the matter savory, i.e. there was not, according to the mode of that time, a fool or clown, to joke, quibble, and talk freely. Nor no matter in the phrase that might indite the author of affection, i.e. nor none of those passionate, pathetic love-scenes, so essential to modern tragedy. But he called it an honest method, i.e. he owned, however tasteless this method of writing, on the ancient plan, was to our times, yet it was chaste and pure; the distinguishing character of the Greek drama. I need only make one observation on all this; that, thus interpreted, it is the justest picture of a good tragedy, wrote on the ancient rules. 2. A second proof that this speech was given to be admired is from the intrinsic merit of the speech itself, which contains the description of a circumstance very happily imagined, namely: Ilium and Priam's falling together, with the effect it had on the destroyer. Now this circumstance, illustrated with the fine similitude of the storm, is so highly worked up as to have well deserved a place in Virgil's second book of the Æneid, even though the work had been carried on to that perfection which the Roman poet had conceived. 3. The third proof is, from the effects which followed on the recital. Hamlet, his best character, approves it; the player is deeply affected in repeating it; and only the foolish Polonius tired with it. The player changes color, and the tears start from his eyes. But our author was too good a judge of nature to make bombast and unnatural sentiment produce such an effect. But if any one will still say that Sh. intended to represent a player unnaturally and fantastically affected, we must appeal to Hamlet, that is, to Sh. himself in this matter; who, on the reflection he makes upon the player's emotion, in order to excite his own revenge, gives not the least hint that the player was unnaturally or injudiciously moved. On the contrary, his fine description of the actor's emotion shows he thought just otherwise. And indeed had Hamlet esteemed this emotion anything unnatural, it had been a very improper circumstance to spur him to his purpose. That which supports the common opinion concerning this passage is the turgid expression in some parts of it, which, they think, could never be given by the poet to be commended. We shall, therefore, in the next place examine the lines most obnoxious to censure, and see how much, allowing the charge, this will make for the induction of their conclusion. [See lines 451 and 473.] Now whether these be bombast or not is not the question; but whether Sh. esteemed them so. That he did not so esteem them appears from his having used the very same thoughts in the same expressions in his best plays, and given them to his principal characters, where he aims at the sublime; as in the following passages: Troilus (Tro. & Crec. V, iii, 40-42) far outstrains the execution of Pyrrhus's sword in the character he gives of Hector's. Cleopatra (Ant. & Cleo. IV, xv, 44) rails at fortune in the same manner. But another use may be made of these quotations; a discovery of this recited play, which, letting us into a circumstance of our author's life (as a writer) hitherto unknown, was the reason I have been so large upon this question. I think, then, it appears from what has been said that the play in dispute was Shakespeare's own, and that this was the occasion of writing it. He was desirous, as soon as he had found his strength, of restoring the chasteness and regularity of the ancient stage, and therefore composed this tragedy on the model of the Greek drama, as may be seen by throwing so much action into relation. But his attempt proved fruitless, and the raw, unnatural taste, then prevalent, forced him back again into his old Gothic manner. For which he took this revenge upon his audience. Capell: Among the very few plays of that time that have not been seen by the editor is one that bears the title, 'Dido, queen of Carthage,' in which one might be apt to expect the speech in question; the cast of Thomas Nash's production is widely different. Malone: I formerly thought that these lines were extracted from some old play, of which it appeared to me probable that Marlowe was the author; but whatever Shakespeare's view in producing them may have been, I am now decidedly of opinion they were written by himself, not in any former unsuccessful piece, but expressly for the play of Hamlet. It is observable that what Warburton calls 'the fine similitude of the storm,' is likewise found in our poet's Venus & Adonis. Steevens: The praise which Hamlet bestows on this piece is certainly dissembled, and agrees very well with the character of madness, which, before witnesses, he thought it necessary to support. The speeches before us have so little merit that nothing but an affectation of singularity could have influenced Warburton to undertake their defence. The poet, perhaps, meant to exhibit a just resemblance of some of the plays of his own age, in which the faults were too general and too glaring to permit a few splendid passages to stone for them. The player knew his trade, and spoke the lines in an affecting manner, because Hamlet had declared them to be pathetic, or might be in reality a little moved by them. The mind of the prince, it must be confessed, was fitted for the reception of gloomy ideas, and his tears were ready at a slight solicitation. It is by no means proved that Sh. has employed the same thoughts clothed in the same expressions in his best plays. If he bids the false huswife Fortune break her wheel, he does not desire her to break all its spokes; nay, even its periphery, and make use of the wave afterwards for such an immeasurable cast. Though if what Warburton has said should be found in any instance to be exactly true, what can we infer from thence but that Sh. was sometimes wrong in spite of conviction, and in the hurry of writing committed those very faults which his judgement could detect in others? Warburton is inconsistent in his assertions concerning the literature of Sh. In a note on Tro. & Crec. he affirms that Shakespeare's want of learning kept him from being acquainted with Homer; and yet in this instance would suppose him capable of producing a complete tragedy written on the ancient rules; and that the speech before us had sufficient merit to entitle it to a place in the second book of Virgil's Aeneid. Steevens afterwards discovered a copy of this play of Dido, queen of Carthage, referred to by Capell, and asserted that it did not furnish Sh. with more than a general hint for his description of the death of Priam, &c., unless a correspondence be perceived to Shakespeare's line 451 in 'And with the wind thereof the king fell down,' and to line 458 in 'So leaning on his sword he stood stone still.' The extracts which Steevens gives will be found in Fleay's note, further on; of them Steevens says that surely the greater part is more ridiculous than even Shakespeare's happiest vein of burlesque and parody could have made it. Ritson believes that the admiration of the play expressed by Hamlet was genuine, and that this is probably an extract from one of Shakespeare's early productions. He then adds: The verses recited are far superior to those of any coeval writer; the parallel passage in Marlowe and Nash's Dido will not bear the comparison. Possibly, indeed, it might have been his first attempt, before the divinity that lodgeth within him had instructed him to despise the timid and unnatural style so much and so unjustly admired in his predecessors or contemporaries, and which he afterwards so happily ridiculed in 'the swaggering vaine of Ancient Pistol.' Seymour (ii, 172) agrees with Ritson, and Pye (p. 314) agrees with Seymour. Coleridge: This admirable substitution of the epic for the dramatic diction of Shakespeare's own dialogue, and authorized, too, by the actual style of the tragedies before his time (Porrex & Ferrex, Tit. And., &c.), is well worthy of notice. The fancy that a burlesque was intended sinks below criticism; the lines, as epic narrative, are superb. In the thoughts, and even in the separate parts of the diction, this description is highly poetical; in truth, taken by itself, that it is its fault that it is too poetical!—the language of lyric vehemence and epic pomp, and not of the drama. But if Sh. had made the diction truly dramatic, where would have been the contrast between Hamlet and the play in Hamlet? Schlegel (Lect. on Dram. Lit. ii, 197): This extract must not be judged of by itself, but in connection with the place where it is introduced. To distinguish it as dramatic poetry in the play itself, it was necessary that it should rise above its dignified poetry in the same proportion that the theatrical elevation does above simple nature. Hence Sh. has composed the play in Hamlet altogether in sententious rhymes full of antitheses. But this solemn and measured tone did not suit a speech in which violent emotion ought to prevail, and the poet had no other expedient than the one of which he made choice: overcharging the pathos. The language of the speech in question is falsely emphatical; but yet this fault is so mixed up with true grandeur that a player, practised in calling forth in himself artificially the imitated emotions, may certainly be carried away with it. Besides, it will hardly be believed that Sh. knew so little of his art as not to be aware that a tragedy in which Aeneas had to make a lengthened epic relation of a transaction that happened so long before as the destruction of Troy could neither be dramatical nor theatrical. Caldecott: These warm commendations of Hamlet cannot be other than the real sentiment of Sh. From whatever quarter the fragment came, it affords a decisive proof of Shakespeare's taste in this department of the drama. He may here have chosen to give his conception of the true and just swell of tragedy. Hunter (ii, 234): Is it possible that Sh., who knew so well what belongs to poetry and the dramatic art, can have approved of a wearisome speech like this, its bombast phrases, HAMILTON

[Act II, Sc. ii.

[425. Æneas's tale to Dido.]

Its empty declamation, and with at least two anti-climaxes as palpable as can anywhere be found? There is but one redeeming clause [lines 461-465]. But even this, as the reader cannot but perceive, sinks as it proceeds, and becomes commonplace and inharmonious. His objection to the phrase, 'mobiled queen,' might of itself prove that the poet, if he seemed in anything which he said to commend, spoke ironically, for a more unhappy expression could scarcely have occurred. Probably it was the play of Dido that he meant to ridicule. Strachey (p. 55), speaking of the extracts from Dido, Queen of Carthage, given by Steevens, says: 'Though there is not a line, hardly a thought of them, the same as the passage which the player recites, and which is of course Shakespeare's own, still the style is so like, that the audience would probably have been reminded of Marlowe's play, and so have experienced the sensation of hearing real men quoting a real play; nay, if they retained only a general recollection of the original, might have supposed that the quotation was actually from Marlowe's tragedy.' Elze: From all that we know of Shakespeare's treatment of his own works, it seems in the highest degree improbable, not only that he should have introduced here his own composition, but that he should have praised it also. Rightly to understand this passage, it is essential that we should lose sight of the person of the poet, and separate his opinion from the praise of Hamlet. It is clear that in this speech the keynote of that school of learned poets is struck that was hostile to Shakespeare's naturalistic style. . . .

By making Hamlet so enthusiastic in his admiration of a drama that was moulded on the learned, pathetic, and classic model, Sh. evidently wished to give us an insight into his hero's studious and pre-eminently ideal character. A side-thrust is at the same time unmistakably given to Shakespeare's opponents; in effect he thus appeals to them: 'Behold, it is such folk as my Hamlet that admire you; such folk is it that you educate with your poetry.' Delius: This drama, if there really were such a one, and if it had not been composed for the nonce to suit Hamlet's purpose, could have been written by no one but Sh. himself, and the praise of 'modesty' and 'cunning' must have been meant in seriousness. Fleay (On the Extract from an Old Play in Hamlet. Macmillan's Maga. Dec. 1874, p. 135): Marlowe's play was finished by Nash, after Marlowe's death in 1593, and published in 1594. It is for the most part written in Marlowe's style, with some minor interpolations by Nash. In Act II, sc. i, which is far the weakest in the play, and does least to advance the plot, there are several peculiarities. 1. Priamus is used for the name of the king of Troy eight times, Priam three times only. Elsewhere in the play the form of Priam is used exclusively. 2. The name Alexander is given to Helen's lover; in other parts of this play, and in Marlowe's other works, he is called Paris. 3. At the end of Æneas's tale there is a stage-direction [Exit omnem], although Ascanius remains on the stage and talks to Venus and Cupid, who then come in. This double ending to a scene implies double authorship, or one author working at two distinct times. It is a common phenomenon; in Sh., for instance, we find it in Tro. & Cret. and in Macb. 4. The whole of the scene is inferior in workmanship, in characterization, in theatrical requirements, in poetical power. All the 'Æneas's tale' part could be cut out and not missed. This scene, then, for the above reasons, is unlike Marlowe's work in the rest of the play; it is equally unlike the other plays of his writing. We may confidently assign the greater part of it to Nash, if not the whole. But it was in 1594 that Sh. revised the Æen. IV, in which Marlowe had written a great part, and he might naturally expect to have the revision of this play also committed to him. He was on indifferent terms with Nash at this time. What could be more likely than that he should write a scene, or a portion of one, to show how much better he would have done the editing of the play? He chooses, naturally enough, that scene in which Nash has shown the greatest weakness, and writes as nearly in the Marlowe rhythm as he can. ... [Page 136.] I hold, then, that the object which Sh. had in view in introducing this speech into Hamlet was to expose the weakness of his opponent Nash as a playwright, and to utilize a piece of work which he had ty ing Idle by him. When he wrote Hamlet he seems to have been just entering that cynical state which has been noted by Hallam as a characteristic of his third period.
... In considering this point it must not be forgotten that this speech is contained in the earliest form of the published Hamlet, so that it was an integral part of the play in its first state. This is important so far that when the revised Hamlet was produced, Nash was certainly no longer alive, and Sh. was not the man to exult over a dead enemy. ... [Page 137.] We will now compare some parts of the tale of Aeneas as told by Sh. and by Nash, with a view to show that they are rival productions. Nash describes Pyrrhus thus:

'At last came Pyrrhus, fell, and full of ire,
His harness drooping blood, and on his spear
The mangled head of Priam's youngest son.
And after him his band of myrmidons
With balls of wildfire in their murderous paws,
Which made the funeral flame which burnt fair Troy.'

Shakespeare's is more expanded. Compare lines 430-442. Nash gives this narrative of Priam's death:

'And at Jove's altar finding Priamus,
About whose withered neck hung Hecuba
Folding his hand in hers, and jointly both Beating their breasts and falling on the ground;
He with his falchion's point raised up at once,
And with Megara's eyes stared in their face,
Threatening a thousand deaths at every glance.

Not moved at all, but smiling at his tears,
The butcher while his hands were yet held up Treading upon his breast, struck off his hands.
At which the frantic queen leapt on his face,
And in his eyelids hanging by the nails
A little while prolonged her husband's life.
At last the soldiers pulled her by the heels,
And swung her howling in the empty air,
Which sent an echo to the wounded king,
Whereat he lifted up his bed-rid limbs
And would have grappled with Achilles' son,
Forgetting both his strength and want of hands;
Which he disdaining whisked his sword about,
And with the wind thereof the king fell down;
Then from the navel to the throat at once
He ripped old Priam.'

Compare Sh., lines 446-452. That these passages were written in direct rivalry is manifest; the superior power and excellence of the Sh. portions is equally manifest; and when we remember that the splendid simile of the storm and the description of pecially, where he speaks of Priam's slaughter. If it live in your memory, begin at this line; let me see, let me see;

'The rugged Pyrrhus, like th' Hyrcanian beast,'—
'tis not so; it begins with 'Pyrrhus.'

'The rugged Pyrrhus,—he whose sable arms,
'Black as his purpose, did the night resemble
'When he lay couched in the ominous horse,—
'Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd
'With heraldry more dismal; head to foot
'Now is he total gules; horribly trick'd
'With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
'Baked and impasted with the parching streets,

Hecuba are also in the Sh. speech, it is impossible to imagine that he meant these lines for mere bombast. I do not quote the Hecuba part, as there is nothing corresponding to it in Nash, and it is in every one's hands. The finest bit in Nash is the picture of Pyrrhus:

'So leaning on his sword he stood stone still,
Viewing the fire wherewith rich lilion burnt,'

and this Sh. has capped with lines 458-466. There is a moral certainty that these passages are competitors for popular favor. . . . On all grounds alike, then, I hold that this scene was written by Sh. in 1594, as a supplement to Marlowe's unfinished play, in competition with Nash, and that it was introduced by him into the first draught of Hamlet in 1601 or thereabouts.

435. gules] STEEVENS: This signifies red in the barbarous jargon of heraldry. Also in Timon, IV, iii, 59. WEDGWOOD: From the red color of the mouth. Gueule, the mouth, throat, gullet. GLOSSARY OF TERMS USED IN BRITISH HERALDRY: Perhaps from the Persian ghul, a rose; if so, it was probably introduced by the Crusaders.

435. trick'd] MALONE: That is, 'painted, smeared.' CLARENDON: In heraldry a 'trick' is a description in drawing, opposed to 'blazon,' a description in words. DELILUS: 'Trick'd,' like the following participles, 'baked' and 'impasted,' belongs to 'gules,' not to 'he.'

437. impasted] CALDECOTT: See Rich. II: III, ii, 154. All terms and phrases
HAMLET

First Play.

'Anon he finds him
Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword, Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repugnant to command; unequal match'd,
Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unnerved father falls. Then senseless Ilium, Seeing to feel this blow, with flaming top Stoops to his base, and with a hideous crash Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear; for, lo! his sword, in this fragment parallel with passages in Sh. tend to prove that it was Shakespeare's own composition.

437-439. streets . . . murder] ANON [Misc. Obs. 1752, p. 21]: Rather read,
'the parching fires That lend a treacherous and damned light To the vile murtherer,' i.e. the streets being in flames afford a treacherous light. Treacherous because they betray their masters to the destroying Pyrrhus.

439. lords'] DELIUS: 'Lords' is better than lord's, since Priam's death is not represented till afterwards, and should not be anticipated here.

440. o'er-sized] CALDECOTT: Covered as with glutinous matter.

'Which was declining on the milky head
'Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick;
'So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood,
'And, like a neutral to his will and matter,
'Did nothing.
'But as we often see, against some storm,
'A silence in the heavens, the rack stand still,
'The bold winds speechless and the orb below
'As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder
'Doth rend the region; so after Pyrrhus' pause
'Aroused vengeance sets him new a-work;
'And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
'On Mars his armour, forged for proof eterne,
"With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
'Now falls on Priam.
'Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune! All you gods,
'In general synod take away her power;
'Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
'And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven
'As low as to the fiends!"

471. Dryden (Preface to Troilus and Cressida, 1679): What a pudder is here kept in raising the expression of trifling thoughts. Would not a man have thought that the Poet had been bound Prentice to a Wheel-wright for his first Rant? and had followed a Ragman, for the clout and blanket, in the second? Fortune is painted on a wheel; and therefore the writer in a rage, will have Poetical Justice done upon every member of that Engin; after this execution be bowls the Nave downhill, from Heaven to the Fiends: (an unreasonable long mark a man would think;) 'tis well there are no solid Orbs to stop it in the way, or no Element of fire to consume it; but when it came to the earth, it must be monstrous heavy, to break ground as low as to the Center. His making milk the burning eyes of Heaven was a pretty tollerable flight too; and I think no man ever drew milk out of eyes before him: yet to make the wonder greater, these eyes were burning. Such a sight indeed were enough to raise'd passion in the Gods, but to excuse the effects of it, he tells you perhaps they did not see it. [This passage is criticised not as Shakespeare's, but as 'written by some other poet.' Ed.]

473. fellies] Clarendon: 'Iantes: The fellowes of a wheele; the peeces (of wood) whereof the ring, or the rime consists.'—Cotgrave.

478. jig] Steevens: A jig was not, in Shakespeare's time, only a dance, but a ludicrous dialogue in metre, and of the lowest kind, like Hamlet's conversation with Ophelia [III, ii, 105-115]. In The Hog hath lost his Pearl, 1614, one of the players comes to solicit a gentleman to write a jig for him. Many of these jigs are entered in the Stationers' Company:—Philips his Jigg of the Slyppers,' 1595; 'Kempe's Jigg of the Kitchen-stuff Woman,' 1595. Malone: So, also, in the Prologue to Fletcher's Love's Pilgrimage [misquoted; it should be the Fair Maid of the Inn—Collier's Hist. Eng. Dram. Poetry, iii, 380]: 'A jig shall be clapp'd at, and every rhyme Prais'd and applauded,' &c. A jig was not always in the form of a dialogue; it signified a ludicrous metrical composition, as well as a dance. So in Florio: 'Frottola, a countrie gigge, or round, or countrie song, or wanton verse.' Collier (Hist. Eng. Dram. Poetry, iii, 380): We have no extant specimen of any such performance. It seems to have been a ludicrous composition in rhyme, sung, or said, by the clown, and accompanied by dancing and playing upon the pipe and tabor. Singer: Gigli, in Italian, was a fiddle or crowd. Hence jig (first written gigge, though pronounced with g soft, after the Italian) was a ballad or ditty sung to a fiddle. Dyce (Note on Prologue to Fair Maid of the Inn): More persons than one were sometimes employed in a jig; and there is reason to believe that the performance was of considerable length, lasting even, on some occasions, for an hour. Clarendon: See Cotgrave, 'Farce: f. A (fond and dissolve) Play, Comedie, or Enterlude; also, the Iyg at the end of an Enterlude, wherein some pretie knauerie is acted.' [See Chappell (Popular Music of the Olden Time, p. 495), where the tune is given of The King's Jig, which is supposed to have been one of the tunes to which Charles II danced. Collier says that some of Tarleton's jiggs, both music and words, survive in MS.]

480. mobled] Warburton: That is veiled. Sandys [Travels, i, 69, ed. 1637—Clarendon], speaking of the Turkish women, says: 'their heads and faces are so mobled in fine linen that nothing is to be seen of them but their eyes.' Upton (p. 299): This designedly affected expression seems to be formed from Virg. Aen. ii, 40: Magna comitante caterva, i.e. mob-led Queen. Farmer: 'The moon does mobble up herself.'—Shirley's Gentleman of Venice. Holt White: It is nothing but a deprivation of muffled. 'Mobled nine days in my considering cap.'—Ogilby's Fables. Malone: A few lines lower we are told that she had 'a clout' upon her head. To mob (in the North pronounced mob), says Ray, in his Dict. of North Country Words, is 'to dress carelessly. Mobs are slatterns.' Coleridge: A mob-cap is still a word in common use for a morning-cap, which conceals the whole head of hair, and passes under the chin. It is nearly the same as the night-cap, that is, it is an imitation of it, so as to answer the purpose (‘I am not drest for company’), and yet reconciling it with neatness and perfect purity. Delius: The real meaning which Sh. attached to it here is still doubtful; that an unusual word was intended is plain, both from Hamlet's objection to it and Polonius's approval of it. G. H. of S. (N. & Qu. 23 July, 1864) suggests maddled, a word in use in Yorkshire, meaning not absolutely mad, but bewildered almost to madness.

482. good] Warburton: Sh. has judiciously chosen Polonius to represent the false taste of that audience which has condemned the play here reciting. When the actor comes to the finest and most pathetic part of the speech, Polonius cries out, This is too long.' And yet this man of modern taste, who stood all this time perfectly unmoved with the forcible imagery of the relator, no sooner tears, amongst many

519. mock] Clarke: Hamlet, like the true gentleman that he is, feels that he has been betrayed into treating the old courtier with something of impatience and discourtesy; therefore he bids the actor, whom he knows to be naturally and professionally disposed to waggery, not forget himself to Polonius on the strength of the example just given.

522. alone] Clarke: The eagerness shown by Hamlet to be left in peace by himself appears to be a main evidence of his merely acting a part and assuming madness; he longs to get rid of the presence of persons before whom he has resolved to wear a show of insanity. Alone, he is collected, coherent, full of introspection. That he is neither dispassionate nor cool appears to be the result of his unhappy source of thought, not the result of derangement; he is morally afflicted, not mentally affected.

523. peasant slave] It is shown by Furnivall in N. & Qu. 12 April and 3

Is it not monstrous that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit
That from her working all his visage wann'd;
Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suitting
With forms to his conceit? And all for nothing!

For Hecuba?
What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears

May, 1873, that it was possible for Sh. to have seen in the flesh some of the bondmen or 'peasant slaves' of England.

527. wann'd] STEEVENS upheld warm'd, because the effort to shed tears and the unusual exertion in a passionate speech would warm and flush the face; no actor can grow pale at will, and even if he could there is nothing in the fragment to make him. MALONE effectually silenced all this by referring to Polonius's speech, line 497. CLARENDON: We have had an instance of a verb formed from an adjective in 'pale,' I, v, 90, where it is transitive.

529. function] CALDECOTT: That is, each power and faculty,—the whole energies of soul and body. 'Nature within me seems In all her functions weary of herself.'—SAMS. Agon. 596, i. e. using the term that imparts 'performance or the doing of a thing' for 'the power or faculty by which the thing is done.' CLARENDON: The whole action of the body. See Macb. I, iii, 140.

530. conceit] CLARENDON: Conception (of the character he was personating). [See also III, iv, 114: IV, v, 43.]

534. cue] WEDGWOOD: The last words of the preceding speech, prefixed to the speech of an actor in order to let him know when he is to come on the stage. From the letter Q, by which it was marked. 'Q, a note of entrance for actors, because it is the first letter of quando, when, showing when to enter and speak.'—C. Butler, Eng. Gram, 1634, in N. & Qu. 5 Aug. 1865. Minshew explains it somewhat differently: 'A qu, a term used among stage-players, & Lat. qualis, i.e. at what manner of word the actors are to begin to speak, one after another hath done his speech. The French term is replique.'
And cleave the general ear with horrid speech,
Make mad the guilty and appal the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed
The very faculties of eyes and ears.
Yet I,
A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property and most dear life
A damn'd defeat was made.  Am I a coward?

539. faculties] faculty Ff, Rowe +, Cald.

537. free] Caldecott: Free from offence, guiltless.  [See 'free souls,' III, ii, 231.]
541. peak] Singer: To mope, to act foolishly and with irresolution.
542. John-a-dreams] Steevens: That is, John of dreams, which means only John the dreamer; a nickname for any ignorant, silly fellow. Thus the puppet thrown at during Lent was called Jack-a-lent, and the ignis-fatuus, Jack-a-lantern. John-a-droynes, however, if not a corruption of this nickname, seems to have been some well-known character, as I have met with more than one allusion to him. So, in Have with you to Saffron Walden, by Nash, 1596: 'The description of that poor John-a-droynes his man, whom he had hired,' &c. John-a-Droynes is likewise a foolish character in Whetstone's Promes and Cassandra, 1578. Collier: It is rather a nickname for a sleepy, apathetic fellow. The only mention yet met with of John-a-dreams is in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, 1608 (see Sh. Soc. vol. x, p. 49): 'His name is John, indeede, saies the cinnick; but neither John a nodd, nor John a dreames, yet either as you take it.' John-a-droynes was, in all probability, a different person.
542. unpregnant] Johnson: Not quickened with a new desire of vengeance; not teeming with revenge. Clarendon: Having no living thoughts within relating to my cause. In Meas. for Meas. I, i, 12, 'pregnant in' is used for 'filled with knowledge of.'
544. property] Clarendon: This appears here to be used in the sense of 'own person.' Compare 'proper life,' in V, ii, 66. Or possibly it may mean his 'kingly right.' The commentators, by their silence, seem to take it in the ordinary modern sense, which can hardly be. [I suppose it refers to his crown, his wife, everything, in short, which he might be said to be possessed of, except his life. 'Property' is used in its ordinary modern sense in Merry Wives, III, iv, 10. Ed.]
545. defeat] Warburton: Destruction. Steevens: This word is very licen-

Chapman's Revenge for Honour: 'he might meantime make a sure defeat On our good aged father's life.' Island of Gulls, 1606: 'my late shipwreck has made a defeat both of my friends and treasure.' Malone: See Ham. V, ii, 58, for the word used in the same sense. [See also I, ii, 10.]

549. me] See Abbott, § 220, for instances of 'me' instead of 'for me, in virtue of its representing the old dative.

550. Ha!] Elze ingeniously suggests that this was a substitution either by the Censor or by the actors themselves, for the objectionable oath, 'Swounds;' and that both exclamations in the same place cannot be right. The fact that Q, reads 'Sure,' renders it not impossible that the coarser oath was substituted for the milder one by the actors.

552. But] Abbott (§ 122): 'It cannot be (that I am otherwise than a coward),' i.e. 'it cannot be that I am courageous; on the contrary (but adversative), I am pigeon-liver'd.'

552. pigeon-liver'd] White: It was supposed that pigeons and doves owed their gentleness to the absence of gall. 'A Milk-white Doue...About whose Necke was in a Choller wrought "Only like me my mistres hath no gall."'—Drayton's Ninth Eclogue. Clarendon: 'Gall' is here used metaphorically for 'courage'; so Tro. & Ctes. I, iii, 237. [See Harting's Ornithology of Sk. p. 185.]

553. oppression] Collier (ed. 2): It is transgression in the (MS), but 'oppression' is no doubt the proper reading. Hamlet is alluding to his own lack of gall, and to 'oppression' being bitter to himself. The old annotator seems to have thought that the hero was referring to transgression on the part of others, which he lacked gall to make bitter to them. Dyce: Hamlet means he lacks gall to make him feel the bitterness of oppression. Singer (Shakespeare's Text Vindicated, p. 264) proposes aggression, a conjecture which the Cam. Ed. mark as 'withdrawn.' I gladly accept the fact on their testimony.

554. 555. I...offal] Sievers (Archiv f. n. Sprachen, vol. vi, 1849, p. 12) maintains that here Hamlet's plan is revealed, which is, not revenge, not murder, but to bring Claudius to judgement and legal execution as a criminal, upon whose gibbeted carcass the region kites can fatten.
556. kindless] Johnson: Unnatural. Singer: We have 'kindly' for natural, i.e. accordance with kind, elsewhere. Hudson: Observe how Hamlet checks himself in this strain of objurgation, and then, in mere shame of what he has done, turns to ranting at himself for having ranted.
559. father] Jennens: There seems to be no necessity for this word here; or rather it is tautology. Boswell: The dear murder'd for the dear person murder'd is very far from being a harsh ellipsis. Knight pronounces the text of the Ff 'a beautiful reading,' and White declares it 'a fine form of speech, which needs no support, and which we have had before in this play: I, iii, 67;' adding that the text of Q is 'inferior in both thought and rhythm.' Halliwell: The 'dear departed' is still a common phrase, and the ellipsis in the Ff was, I suspect, in consonance with the phraseology of Shakespeare's time.
561. Must] Tschischwitz finds a profound meaning in this use of 'must,' where he would expect do to be used. It indicates the necessity, so he affirms, that was laid on Hamlet to act just as he does.
563. scullion] Theobald was persuaded that Sh. wrote cullion, i.e. a stupid, heartless, white-livered fellow; as in Lear, II, ii, 36; 2 Hen. VI: I, iii, 43.

564. about] Johnson: Wits, to your work! Brain, go about the present business. Steevens, after citing 'My brain about again! for thou hast found New projects now to work on,' from Heywood, Second Part of The Iron Age, 1632, strangely enough agrees with Monk Mason in thinking it to be a sea-phrase, meaning, 'be my thoughts shifted into a contrary direction.' Hunter (ii, 235): It should be 'About t', my brains!' that is, set about composing the lines which the players were to add to The Murder of Gonzago.

564. brain] Cambridge Editors: Capell quotes 'braves' as the reading of Q. His own copy has 'braines.' That in the British Museum reads 'braues.' [As does also Ashbee's Facsimile. Ed.]

564. Hum] Hunter (ii, 235): This is evidently intended to be the first conception of the design to try the conscience of the King with the play. This interjection of consideration, deliberation, shows it. Yet Hamlet had already settled with the players that they should speak some verses interpolated in The Murder of Gonzago. This inconsistency is not justified by alleging Hamlet's inconsistency of character. In fact, the interjection ought not to be there, as it makes prospective what is evidently retrospective.

565. play] Steevens: A number of these stories are collected together by Heywood in his Apology for Actors. [See Sh. Soc. vol. vii, p. 57.]Todd gives one from A Warning for Faire Women, 1599; and Clarendon refers to Massinger's Roman Actor, II, i [vol. ii, p. 351, ed. Gifford, 1805], for a similar example there cited.

567. presently] Clarendon: Immediately, as in line 169.

I’ll tent him to the quick; if he but blench, I know my course. The spirit that I have seen May be the devil; and the devil hath power To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and perhaps Out of my weakness and my melancholy, As he is very potent with such spirits, Abuses me to damn me. I’ll have grounds More relative than this. The play’s the thing Wherein I’ll catch the conscience of the king. [Exit.]

573. tent] DYCE (Gloss.): To search with a tent, which was a roll of lint for searching or cleansing a wound or sore.

573. blench] STEEVES: Shrink, or start. HUNTER (ii, 236): Flinch. The meaning is shown in Wase’s translation of the Cynegeticron of Gratianus, 1654: ‘if one set up a piece of white paper, it will make the deer blench, and balk that way,’ p. 77. HALLIWELL: Sh. seems to use ‘blench’ in the sense of ‘to wink, to glance.’ ‘And thus thinkende I stonde still Without blenchinge of mine eie.’—Gower, ed. 1554, f. 128.

575. devil] COLERIDGE: See Sir Thomas Browne:—‘I believe . . . that these apparitions and ghosts of departed persons are not the wandering souls of men, but the unquiet walks of devils, prompting and suggesting us unto mischief, blood, and villainy, instilling and stealing into our hearts, that the blessed spirits are not at rest in their graves, but wander solicitous of the affairs of the world.’—Relig. Med. pt. i, sec. 37.

579. Abuses] DYCE (Gloss.): Deceives, imposes upon.

579, 580. I’ll . . . this] MARSHALL (A Study of Hamlet, p. 153) states that IRVING, before speaking this sentence, takes out the tablets wherein he had recorded his uncle’s guilt, and by a significant gesture indicates that ‘this’ refers to them.

580. relative] JOHNSON: Nearly related, closely connected. CLARENDON: To the purpose. The word is not known to exist elsewhere in this sense.
ACT III

SCENE I.  A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. And can you, by no drift of circumstance,
Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted,
But from what cause he will by no means speak.

Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded,
But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.

13. Niggard] Warburton: This is given as the description of the conversation of a man whom the speaker found not forward to be sounded; and who kept aloof when they would bring him to confession: but such a description can never pass but at cross purposes. Shakespeare certainly wrote it just the other way [see Textual Notes]. That this is the true reading, we need but to turn back to the preceding scene, for Hamlet's conduct, to be satisfied. Mason: Warburton forgets that by question, Shakespeare does not usually mean interrogatory, but discourse; yet in whichever sense the word be taken, this account given by Ros. agrees but ill with the scene between him and Ham, as actually represented. Malone: Slow to begin conversation, but free enough in his answers to our demands. Guild. has just said that Ham. kept aloof when they wished to bring him to confess the cause of his distraction: Ros. therefore here must mean, that up to that point, till they touch'd on that, he was free enough in his answers. Hunter (ii, 236): According to Warburton's reading, the account is that which the lords must have rendered of their interview with Hamlet, if they meant to report it truly. Warburton's emendation has not had justice done to it by other commentators, but we find it confirmed by Q. Staunton: Unless 'question' is admitted to mean argument, Warburton's emendation yields a truer description of Hamlet's bearing towards his schoolfellows than that afforded by the old text. Tschischwitz finds an insuperable objection to Warburton's emendation because it would represent Hamlet as not 'gentlemanlike' in asking many questions and niggard in replying. 'It is manifest that Rosencrantz here merely gives utterance to a rule of good manners.' Clarke: If it be borne in mind that Sh. employs 'of' very variously, and that he occasionally uses the word 'question' to signify 'inquisition,' 'cross-examining,' it appears to be evident that here 'niggard of question' elliptically expresses 'sparing of speech when we cross-examined him;' and if it be remembered how peculiarly Sh. sometimes employs the possessive case, we think it will be perceived that here 'of our demands' is employed to express 'of demands respecting ourselves.' Thus, then, we take the whole speech to mean—He was sparing of speech when we questioned him; but of demands respecting ourselves he was very free in return: which interpretation completely tallies with the circumstances as they really occurred. Clarendon: Ros. and Guild. were completely baffled, and Ham. had the talk almost to himself. Perhaps they did not intend to give a correct account of the interview.

13. of our demands] Collier (ed. 2): 'Of' is altered to to in the (MS), but needlessly, because 'of' has here the force of on. Clarendon: 'Of' may be written either by attraction from the previous 'of,' or it may be used for 'on,' as in Marlowe's 'Jew of Malta,' IV, iv: 'Of that condition I will drink it up.' [See Abbott, § 173, which may perhaps apply to this use of 'of.'] Ed.

[Exeunt King and Polonius.]

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be,—that is the question;
[56. To be, or not to be.]

deavor to discover the train, and to show how one sentiment produces another.

Hamlet, knowing himself injured in the most enormous and atrocious degree, and seeing no means of redress but such as must expose him to the extremity of hazard, mediates on his situation in this manner: Before I can form any rational scheme of action under this pressure of distress, it is necessary to decide whether, after our present state, we are to be, or not to be. That is the question, which, as it shall be answered, will determine whether 'tis nobler, and more suitable to the dignity of reason, to suffer the outrages of fortune patiently, or to take arms against them, and by opposing end them, though perhaps with the loss of life. If to die were to sleep, no more, and by a sleep to end the miseries of our nature, such a sleep were devoutly to be wished; but if to sleep in death be to dream, to retain our powers of sensibility, we must pause to consider in that sleep of death what dreams may come. This consideration makes calamity so long endured; for who would bear the vexations of life, which might be ended by a bare bodkin, but that he is afraid of something in unknown futurity? This fear it is that gives efficacy to conscience, which, by turning the mind upon this regard, chills the ardor of resolution, checks the vigor of enterprise, and makes the current of desire stagnate in inactivity. We may suppose that he would have applied these general observations to his own case, but that he discovered Ophelia. MALONE: Dr Johnson's explication of the first five lines of this passage is surely wrong. Hamlet is not deliberating whether after our present state we are to exist or not, but whether he should continue to live, or put an end to his life; as is pointed out by the second and the three following lines, which are manifestly a paraphrase on the first: 'Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer, &c., or to take arms.' The question concerning our existence in a future state is not considered till the tenth line: 'To sleep! perchance to dream!' &c. See R. of L. 1154.
COLERIDGE: This speech is of absolutely universal interest,—and yet to which of all Shakespeare's characters could it appropriately have been given but to Hamlet?
For Jaques it would have been too deep, and for Iago too habitual a communion with the heart; which in every man belongs, or ought to belong, to all mankind.
LAMB (Works; vol. iii, p. 88. London, 1870): How far the very custom of hearing anything quoted, withers and blows upon a fine passage, may be seen in those speeches from Hen. V., &c., which are current in the mouths of schoolboys, from their being to be found in Enfield's Speaker, and such kind of books. I confess myself utterly unable to appreciate that celebrated soliloquy in Hamlet, beginning,
'To be, or not to be,' or to tell whether it be good, bad, or indifferent; it has been so handled and pawed about by declamatory boys and men, and torn so inhumanly from its living place and principle of continuity in the play, till it has become to me a perfect dead member. CALDECOTT, criticising Dr Johnson, says that the train of thought is obvious enough; it is only the grammatical thread that technically may call for some unwinding. He denies that any doubt is here raised by Hamlet as to a future state of existence,—Hamlet is questioning solely what the condition of such existence is to be. 'A desire to be out of the world is one of the most strongly-marked features of Hamlet's character. It is the first wish he utters when alone: I, ii, 129. But he is then restrained from anything beyond a wish for suicide by religious scruples. The inclination now returns upon him more forcibly (having more cause for such an impulse), and the prohibition of Heaven does not enter into consideration. It is here only, what he shall change his life for. This is the lan-[56. To be, or not to be.]
guage and subject of a man's mind who is nearer death, than he who only wishes that it were lawful to kill himself.' Hunter (ii, 236): This soliloquy is placed in Q4 at the beginning of what is now Act II. It stands there most appropriately. We have seen, at the close of Act I, the state of Hamlet's mind immediately on having received the dread information and the solemn command of the Ghost; we are next presented with what was the state of his mind after a few days' reflection. He enters solus, in a meditative mood, and the subjects of his meditations are among the most awful which can engage mortal thoughts. This is to show his natural mind.
Then follows the dialogue with Ophelia, which is intended to show us his artificial mind,—that idle, wandering Ophelia which he assumed, the better to accomplish his object. I can conceive nothing more dramatically proper than this. It prepares for all the succeeding action in which the natural and the artificial Hamlet are so wildly combined. Why there was a change in the arrangement, or by whom it was made, I can no more explain than I can account for many other things connected with the publication of these dramas. But that the play is greatly injured by the change I feel a confident conviction; for not only is this soliloquy wanting in the place most appropriate to it, but it is now found in a place not suitable to it. Such meditations as these are not such as were likely to arise in the mind of one who had just conceived a design by which he hoped to settle a doubt of a very serious kind, and who must have been full of curiosity about the issue of his plot. If this speech is to indicate deliberation concerning suicide, or is even allied to suicide, such deliberation is surely out of place when curiosity was awake, and his mind deeply intent on something that he must do. To be sure, the hypothesis of Inconsistency will explain all; but then it will explain anything. Another very material effect is produced by the change in the point at which this solus speech is introduced. The line, 'But look where sadly the poor wretch comes reading,' immediately precedes his entry, when, supposing himself to be unobserved, he gives utterance to the musings of his mind. See also Q4. It is thus manifest that the poet's intention was that these should be meditations of Hamlet on something which he found written in a book which he holds in his hand, a book which spoke of the evils of life, of death, their cure, of futurity, of the question of being or not being when we have shuffled off this mortal coil, and that what he says arises out of the argument in the book before him, and is not to be regarded as thoughts springing up in his own mind. [See note, line 60.] 'To be, or not to be: ay, there's the point,' as it is in the Quarto, is equiva-tent to, 'You, the author, are discussing the question of what shall be hereafter; you have a great and mighty subject in hand.' And the words as we now have them, 'To be, or not to be,—that is the question,' are much the same, if we regard, as we may, 'question' as equivalent to theme, argument, or subject. [There is also an analysis of this soliloquy to be found in Goldsmith's Works (vol. iii, p. 316, London, 1854), which attempts to prove that it is 'a heap of absurdities, whether we consider the situation, the sentiment, the argumentation, or the poetry.' This essay and five others have been included in Goldsmith's works on the strength of their having appeared in The British Magazine during the years 1761, 1762, and 1763, but no one, I think, can read them, certainly the one in question, without agreeing with the editor of the edition, Peter Cunningham, 'that they are not by Goldsmith.'

The needless attempt, however, has been made gravely to refute this essay in Hackett's Notes and Comments on Shakespeare, New York, 1863, pp. 13-59. For Ger-

58. slings] WALKER (Crit. ii, 16): Stings is undoubtedly the true reading. [See GERTH's extraordinary interpretation of this word in Appendix, Vol. II.]

59. sea] POPE: Perhaps siege, which continues the metaphor of 'slings,' 'arrows,' 'taking arms,' and represents the being encompassed on all sides with troubles. THEOBALD: Or one might emend nearer the traces of the text: 'th' assay of troubles' [SINGER has no doubt that this was the word], or 'a 'say of troubles,' i.e. the attempts, attacks, &c. But perhaps any change is unnecessary, considering Shakespeare's freedom in combining metaphors, and that a 'sea' is used to signify a vast quantity, multitude, or confluence of anything. The prophet Jeremiah, in chap. li, 42, calls a prodigious army, a sea. AESCHYLUS is frequent in the use of this metaphor: Septem contra Thebas [lines 64 and 114, ed. Dindorf]. Besides, a 'sea of troubles' among the Greeks grew into proverbial usage: καὶ ὁλόανω. So that the phrase means the troubles of human life, which flow in upon us, and encompass us round, like a sea. HANMER: Assailing would preserve the propriety of the metaphor. JOHNSON: Sh. breaks his metaphors often, and in this desultory speech there was less need of preserving them. CALDECOTT: This mode of speaking is proverbial, and has been so in all ages and in all languages; neither can any metaphor be conceived more apt than that of the sea, to convey the idea of an overwhelming mass. With the closest analogy we say, a flood of transport, a torrent of abuse, a peck of troubles. Sh. uses it everywhere and in every form; and the integrity of his metaphor is that which he least thinks of. GARRICK (Oration in Honor of Shakespeare's Jubilee): Shakespeare's terms rather than his sentences are metaphorical; he calls an endless multitude a sea, by a happy allusion to the perpetual succession of wave on wave; and he immediately expresses opposition by 'taking up arms,' which, being fit in itself, he was not solicitous to accommodate to his first image. This is the language in which a figurative and rapid conception will always be expressed. A. E. B[RAE] (N. & Qu. vol. vi, 23 Oct. 1852): To take arms against a sea neither presents an intelligible idea in itself, nor assists in carrying on the general allusion to offensive and defensive warfare. 'Slings' and 'arrows' are figurative of armed aggression, against which to have recourse to arms in opposition is a natural sequence of idea; but if these arms are to be directed against a sea of troubles, the sequence is broken, and the whole allusion becomes obscure and uncertain. But the whole image is that of a host of evils thronging to assault us in this life,—a mortal coil, as it is afterwards called, in opposition to the immortal coil after death of ills we know not of,—this attack we may put an end to, or 'shuffle off,' by taking arms against it, scilicet, 'a bare bodkin.' Thus the very necessity of the context plainly exacts some word expressive of tumultuous attack, and such a word we obtain, bearing precisely that meaning, by the slight alteration of 'a sea' into assay. It is singular that lexicographers, amongst the several definitions they have ascribed to it, should have failed to include that one peculiar meaning,—charge or onset,—which renders it so appropriate. See II, i, 71. But by Spenser the word is most frequently used, and its meaning most plainly indicated. See Faerie Queene, V, ii; V, xi. As to the probability of substitution, an equally close approximation exists between assay and 'a sea' as between asters and 'as stars;' nor is it at all certain that even in sound the vowels a and e were so distinctive in those days as in our own. The probability is still greater if it were spelt, as was often the case, with one a. Assay has all the meaning of Pope's conjecture, with the added sense, peculiar to itself, of thronging or simultaneous onset. Thus, too, in III, iii, 69, 'make assay' receives great force and beauty if interpreted, 'throng to the rescue.' [Although A. E. B. was anticipated by Theobald, yet his defence is so vigorous that I have not scrupled to insert it; it is doubtful whether his definition will apply to II, i, 65. Ed.] Bailey (i, 28) maintains that Sh. never could have written anything so inconsequent as lines 59 and 60: 'Hamlet proposes to himself the question whether he shall or shall not continue to live; but in proceeding to amplify it he performs the operation which is called changing a child at nurse, i.e. he substitutes a totally different question—namely, whether he shall continue to bear his wrongs patiently, or shall fight against them and put them down? It is as if my neighbor Lepidus, whilst deliberating whether he should remain in his present house or quit it, were to say: 'To remain or to quit? That is the question; whether it is better for me to continue to endure rattling windows, &c., or to call in the carpenter, and so put an end to these annoyances.'"—vol. ii, p. 305. Accordingly, Bailey believes that logic is vindicated, and the true text restored, by reading 'to take arms against the seat of troubles, And by a poniard, or by depoising, end them.' Or the line 'intrinsically, or considered by itself, might be restored by reading, "to take arms against a host of troubles;" although the principal fault of the passage would remain unaffected.'—p. 306. Staunton: As Sh. has already furnished us with 'a sea of joys,' 'a sea of glory,' 'a sea of conscience,' 'a sea of wax,' 'a sea of care,' any emendation is very questionable. Halliwell cites: 'Whatsoever it be (which hardly at the length can be depainted) that after a sea of troubles we enjoy in this life,' &c.—The Passenger of Benvenuto, 1612. Keightley (who inclines to Pope's conj.) says that this is almost a solitary instance of the figurative use of 'sea' by Sh. Hackett (p. 51): The 'sea' here is the heart,—the fountain of existence, and it is compared in its agitated condition to a 'sea of troubles.' 'The analogy between the sea, with its ebb and flow, through rivers, channels, and creeks, and the heart, by whose impulse the blood courses through the veins and arteries, must be obvious to every one upon reflection.' Sh. frequently compares the heart to a 'sea.' Ingleby (Sh. Hermeneutics, p. 88): One consideration of the highest importance has been entirely ignored. When Ham. talked of ending his sea of troubles, or, as he afterwards describes it, shuffling off his mortal coil, he had a covert consciousness, a conscience, in fact, which stayed the hand he would have raised against his own life; viz. that this so-called ending and shuffling off was a mere delusion, just as much so as repelling the advancing waves of the sea with shield and spear. Is not the metaphor then sound and whole? If there be an incongruity in the notion of taking arms, offensively or defensively, against the sea, is there not just as great an incongruity in using a bare bodkin against the soul,—the immortal part which (as Raleigh has it) 'no stab can kill'?

[In proof that the metaphor in question is consistent, and has all the external evidences of authenticity, Ingleby cites a passage from Ritson's Memoirs of the Celts (p. 118), which is itself a translation of one in Aelian, to the effect that the Celts in the wantonness of their bravery oppose the overwhelming sea, and 'taking arms rush upon the waves,' in like manner as if they were able to terrify or wound them.]

60. end them] SEBASTIAN EVANS (Footnote in Ingleby's Sh. Hermeneutics, p. 92) would omit the pronoun after 'end,' understanding by that word die.

60. sleep] THEOBALD: This seems to be sneered at by Beau. & Fl. in their Scornful Lady [II, i, Works, vol. iii, p. 25, ed. Dyce]. DOUCHE (ii, 238): There is a good deal on this subject in Cardanus's Comforde, 1576, a book which Sh. had certainly read. In fol. 30 it is said: 'In the holy scripture, death is not accompted other than sleepe, and to dye is sayde to sleepe.' HUNTER (ii, 243): This seems to be the book which Sh. placed in the hands of Hamlet, and the following passages seem to approach so near to the thought of this soliloquy that we cannot doubt that they were in Shakespeare's mind when he put this speech into the mouth of Hamlet: 'How much were it better to follow the counsel of Agathius, who right well commended death, saying, that it did not only remove sickness and all other grief, but also, when all other discommodities of life did happen to man often, it never would come more than once. Seeing, therefore, with such ease men die, what should we account of death to be resembled to anything better than sleep? Most assured it is that such sleeps are most sweet as be most sound, for those are the best where in like unto dead men we dream nothing. The broken sleeps, the slumber, and dreams full of visions, are commonly in them that have weak and sickly bodies.'—Book ii.

CLARENDON: These resemblances to Cardan are not very striking.

61. more] KNIGHT: Surely the doubt [indicated by Capell's '?] whether death and sleep are identical comes too early; the reasoning proceeds to assume that they are the same. In line 65 comes the doubt—'perchance to dream.' The 'no more' is nothing more.

61. to say we] BAILEY (i. 42) thinks that 'to say' here breaks the train of thought, and has nothing to do where it is placed. 'By simply expunging "say we" every one will be sensible how greatly the passage is improved, and that the introduction of saying is a sheer impertinence which could not have proceeded from the clear head of our great dramatist.' But for metre's sake a foot must be supplied, which will be appropriate in sound, form, and sense—this foot Bailey thinks is to be found in straightway.

67. coil] WARNERTON: Turmoil, bustle. HEATH: The incurrence of this mortal body. STEEVES: Compare A Dolfull Discours of Two Strangers, &c., published by Churchyard, among his Chippes, 1575: 'Yea, shaking off this sinfull soyle Me thincke in cloudes I see,' &c. M. MASON (p. 383) agrees with Heath in referring this to the body, this 'covering of flesh,' and is persuaded that we should read 'mortal spoil,' which is the same word as the slough which the snake casts every year. In sense it means the same as 'the case of flesh,' in Bondura [IV, iv, p. 82, Beau. & Fl. Works, ed. Dyce]; and again, 'a separation Betwixt this spirit and the case of flesh.'—The Elder Brother [IV, iii, p. 262, Beau. & Fl. Works, ed. Dyce]; but the most complete parallel is 'this muddy vesture of decay.'—Merr. of Ven. V, i, 64. CALDECOTT: It is here used in each of its senses: turmoil, or bustle, and that which entwines or wraps round. Snakes generally lie like the coils of ropes; and, it is conceived, that an allusion is here had to the struggle which that animal is obliged to make in casting his slough. HUNTER (ii, 240): He was thinking of the coil of a rope. With this expression 'shuffled off' better coheres. SINGER: It is remarkable that under garbaglio, which corresponds in Italian to our 'coil,' Florio has 'a pecke of troubles,' of which Shakespeare's 'sea of troubles' may be only an aggrandised idea. ELZE: With what reason can turmoil or noise be termed mortal? And how can we shuffle off a mortal noise? We are convinced that under 'coil' is concealed an error which we can remedy by an almost imperceptible change, if instead of 'coil' we read vail. Vail means a covering, an integument, and our body is the mortal covering or integument which we must shuffle off in order to enter on the life beyond. In Botany vail is the envelope, the chalypter of mosses, which enfolds the fructifying organs and which is burst by them, and it is not impossible that it was used generally for the envelope of buds. We do not venture to assert that Sh. knew this meaning of the word, but we know with what keen looks he must have examined nature. Beyond a doubt, clay would be better, but it would harmonise less with the received text. Elze (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, vol. ii, p. 362) advocates the substitution of soil for 'coil,' which word he found in the Dolfull Discours, quoted Must give us pause; there's the respect
That makes calamity of so long life;
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,

by Steevens. Elze supports his conjecture very ably, but it is needless. 'Shuffle' decides; a coil may be said to be shuffled off, but soil would be shaken off. HUDSON: As Wordsworth has it: 'the fretful stir unprofitable, and the fever of the world.' In N. & Qu. 23 Feb. '56, INGLEBY started the question of how far the popular interpretation of 'coil,' as the body, is justified; the discussion was continued by 'X.' on the 15 March following, who maintained that in every instance where the word is used by Sh. it means tumult, tumult; and in a second communication to the same journal on the 11th Oct., the same correspondent pertinently asks whether the contrast be not intended between 'coil' and 'quietus.' INGLEBY replied (8 Nov. '56) that the interpretation of body for 'coil' was a popular error, not his, and that it perhaps arose, as suggested to him by a correspondent, from a confusion on the part of the public between the present passage and Colossians, iii, 9, with a reference also to 2 Corinthians, v, 1-5. H. T. RILEY (8 Nov. '56, also) has no doubt that 'coil' refers to the body, and that it was probably suggested by Romans, vii, 24. The coil received its quietus on 18 Sept. '38, by 'A. M. of Greenock,' who cites a derivation of the word from the Gaelic cochul, meaning the scaly integument which clothes the lower limbs of a mermaid [1]. INGLEBY, however, in his excellent Sh. Hermeneutics (p. 88, footnote), says that the analogies are too strong in favor of the 'mortal coil' being what Fletcher, in Bondura, calls the 'case of flesh.' [Caldecott's interpretation, that 'coil' is used in both senses, seems to me the true one. Ed.]

68, 69. Must ... life:] WALKER (Crit. iii, p. 265): Arrange metri gratiâ, if not also to the heightening of the effect, as three lines, ending 'pause,' 'calamity,' 'life.'

68. pause] CALDECOTT: Stop our career, occasion reflection. MOBERLY: This word is for obvious reasons made to take up the time of three syllables in pronunciation; so correction is needless.

68. respect] WARBURTON: Consideration, motive. SINGER: This is Shakespeare's most usual sense of the word.

70. time] WARBURTON: The evils complained of are not the product of time or duration only, but of a corrupted age or manners. We may be sure that Sh. wrote of th' time. JOHNSON: 'Whips' and 'scorns' have no great connection with one another, or with time. Though at all times scorn may be endured, the times that put men ordinarily in danger of whips are very rare. If 'whips' be retained, read: 'whips and scorns of tyrants.' But I think that quip [anticipated by GREY (ii, 295). Ed.], a sneer, a sarcasm, is the proper word. I propose, but not confidently, the quips and scorns of title. [These conjectures of Johnson's were omitted in the Variorum of 1793 and subsequent ones. Ed.] STEEVENS: I think we might venture to read, 'whips and scorns of the times,' i.e. times satirical as the age of Sh., which probably furnished him with the idea. HUNTER (ii, 240): 'Time' is used by early writers as equivalent to the modern expression, The Times. Taylor the Water Poet has: 'mock'd in rhyme, And made the only scornful theme of Time.' Sh. himself seems to use time in the same manner in Rich. III: IV, iv, 106. CLARENDON: Compare Southwell, Saint Peter's Complaint, stanza v, l. 4 [p. 12, ed. Grosart]: 'The scorne of Time, the infamy of Fame.'
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely, 71
The pangs of disprized love, the law's delay, 72
The insolence of office, and the spurns 73
That patient merit of the unworthy takes, 74
When he himself might his quietus make 75
With a bare bodkin? who would fardels bear,
To grunt and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover'd country from whose bourn
No traveller returns, puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all,
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprises of great pith and moment

misery. Farmer: This has been cavilled at by Lord Orrery and others, but without reason. The idea of a traveller in Shakespeare's time was of a person who gave an account of his adventures. STEVENS: Compare, 'Qui nunc it per iter tenebrisum, Illuc unde negant redire quenquam.'—Catullus. DOUCE: No translation of Catullus into English is known to have been made. Both writers may have casually adopted the same sentiment. MALONE (anticipated, however, by Gentleman, in the Dramatic Census, i, 23, 1770) asserts that Sh. meant that from the unknown regions of the dead no traveller returns with all his corporeal powers, such as he who goes on a voyage of discovery brings back. The Ghost being 'inulnerable as the air,' was consequently incorporeal. SCHLEZEL (Lectures, &c. ii, 196, footnote): Sh. wished purposely to show that Ham. could not fix himself in any conviction of any kind whatever. ROFFE (p. 31): According to that philosophy which the Spiritualist believes to have been Shakespeare's, Ham. was perfectly correct in using this phraseology. Surely there is no skepticism in Ham., nor inadvertency in Sh.: a departed spirit appears to the spiritual eyes of the man, and not to his natural eyes; consequently does not, and cannot, overpass 'the bourn' which separates the spiritual and causal world from the natural and effect world. COLERIDGE silences the question for ever: 'If it be necessary to remove the apparent contradiction,—if it be not rather a great beauty,—surely it were easy to say that no traveller returns to this world, as to his home or abiding-place.' HARTLEY COLERIDGE (Essays and Marginalia, i, 170): I will not say that an apparition might not confirm the faith of an Hereafter, where it pre-existed, but where that faith was not, or was neutralised by an inward misery, implicated with the very sense of being, its effect would be but momentary or occasional,—a source of perplexity, not of conviction,—throwing doubt at once on the conclusions of the understanding and the testimony of the senses, and fading itself into the twilight of uncertainty, making existence the mere shadow of a shade.

84. native hue] HUNTER (ii, 242): This was no doubt red. CLARENDON: Natural colour. Compare Love's Lab. IV, iii, 263.
85. thought] HUNTER: 'Thought' is melancholy, whose hue was pale, Mid. N. D. I, i, 15. CLARENDON: Care, anxiety. See IV, v, 182. 'An alderman of London was put in trouble, and dyed with thought, and anguish.'—Bacon, Henry VII, p. 230. [Compare 'Take no thought for the morrow.'—Matt. vi, 34.]
86. pitch] RITSON: I prefer 'pitch,' with an allusion to pitching or throwing the bar,—a manly exercise, usual in country villages. STAUNTON: We suppose 'pitch'
With this regard their currents turn awry
And lose the name of action. Soft you now!
The fair Ophelia?—Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember’d.

Oph. Good my lord.

How does your honour for this many a day?
Ham. I humbly thank you; well, well, well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you now, receive them.

Ham. No, not I; refers to the pitch or summit of the falcon’s flight, and ‘great pitch and moment’ means ‘great eminence and import.’ [Staunton followed the Ff, although he said he preferred the Qq. Ed.] Cambridge Edd. In this doubtful passage we have retained the text of Qq, although the player’s Quartos of 1676, 1683, 1695, and 1703 have, contrary to their custom, followed the Ff, which may possibly indicate that ‘pith’ was the reading according to the stage tradition. Clarendon: For ‘pitch,’ see Twelfth Night, I, i, 12; Rich. II: I, i, 109. ‘Pitch’ seems more appropriately joined to ‘moment’ than ‘pith.’ We have had ‘pith and marrow’ already, I, iv, 22. Whether we read ‘pitch’ or ‘pith,’ there is an equally sudden change of metaphor in ‘current.’ See line 59.

awry Corson: ‘Turn away’ expresses more of an entire change of current, which is Hamlet’s idea, than does ‘turn awry.’

---

Soft you now Caldecott: A gentler pace! have done with this lofty march. Clarendon: Hush, be quiet. Compare Much Ado, V, i, 207.

---

Nymph Halliwell: It has been doubted if the title of ‘Nymph,’ applied to any other than a water-deity, were in use in Shakespeare’s time. It occurs, however, applied to the heroine, in Lodge’s romance of Rosalynde, 1590.

orisons Johnson: This is a touch of nature. Hamlet, at the sight of Ophelia, does not immediately recollect that he is to personate madness, but makes her an address grave and solemn, such as the foregoing meditation excited in his thoughts.
I never gave you aught.

_Oph._ My honour’d lord, I know right well you did; And with them words of so sweet breath composed As made the things more rich; their perfume lost, Take these again; for to the noble mind Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind. There, my lord.

_Ham._ Ha, ha! are you honest?

97. _I know_ Ff, Rowe, Pope, Han.
_Cald. Knt, Coll. White, Huds._ you know
Qq et cet.
99. _the things_ these things Qq, Jen.

92. well] MOBERLY: ‘Well’ becomes twice over a dissyllable by ironical modulation.

96. aught] DOWDEN (p. 139): As things were, Ham. quickly learned, and the knowledge embittered him, that Oph. could neither receive great gifts of soul, nor in return render equivalent gifts. There is an exchange of little tokens between the lovers, but of the large exchange of soul there is none, and Ham. in his bitter mood can truthfully exclaim: ‘I never gave you aught.’

97. _I know_ CORSON: Ophelia’s meaning is, The remembrances you gave me may have been trifles to you, such trifles as left no impression on your mind of your having given them; but I know right well you did, as they were most dear to me at the time. ‘I’ should be read with a strong upward circumflex.

99. lost] DANIEL (p. 75): The Ff give a very good reading, or _qy. refl._ In the next line read, ‘Take them again.’

102. _There, my lord_ MARSHALL (p. 28): At this point, just as Oph. is going to force back on Ham. the sweet remembrances of his love, the fussy old Polonius, who has been fidgeting behind the arras, anxious to see the result of his most notable device, pops his head out, and in so doing drops his chamberlain’s staff. Ham. hears the noise, and instantly suspects the truth, that he is being made the object of an artfully devised scheme to entrap him into some confession of his secret.

103. RICHARDSON (Essays, &c., fifth ed., 1797, p. 102): Hamlet’s air and manner here should not be perfectly grave and serious. Nor is there anything in this dialogue to justify the tragic tone with which it is frequently spoken. Let Ham. be represented as delivering himself in a light, airy, unconcerned, and thoughtless manner, and the rudeness, so much complained of, will disappear. COLE RIDGE: Here it is evident that the penetrating Ham. perceives, from the strange and forced manner of Oph., that the sweet girl was not acting a part of her own, but was a decoy; and his after-speeches are not so much directed to her as to the listeners and spies. Such a discovery in a mood so anxious and irritable accounts for a certain harshness in him;—and yet a wild upworking of love, sporting with opposites in a wilful self-tormenting strain of irony, is perceptible throughout. ‘I did love you once;’—‘I lov’d you not;’—and particularly in his enumeration of the faults of the sex from which Oph. is so free, that the mere freedom therefrom constitutes her character. Note Shakespeare’s charm of composing the female character by the absence of characters, that is, marks and out-jottings. LAMB (iii, 95, ed. 1870): All the Hamlets that I have ever seen, rant and rave at Oph. as if she had committed some great crime, and the audience are highly pleased, because the words of the part are satirical, and they are enforced by the strongest expression of satirical indignation of which the face and voice are capable. But then, whether Ham. is likely to have put on such brutal appearances to a lady whom he loved so dearly, is never thought on. The truth is, that in all such deep affections as had subsisted between Ham. and Oph. there is a stock of Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair?

Oph. What means your lordship?

105. honest] Staunton: That ‘honest’ in this dialogue is equivalent to chaste or virtuous, it would be superfluous to mention, but that some critics, in their strictures on the conduct of Hamlet in the present scene, appear to have forgotten it. The beginning recalls to mind some passages in Shirley’s, The Royal Master, IV, i: ‘King. Are you honest? Theo. Honest! King. I could have used the name of chaste Or virgin; but they carry the same sense.’—[Works, vol. iv, p. 156, ed. Dyce.]

Clarendon: See Winter’s Tale, II, i, 68 and 76.
Ham. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was sometime a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Ham. You should not have believed me; for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock but we shall relish of it; I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived.

117. 108. honesty... beauty] JOHNSON: The true reading seems to be: 'you should admit your honesty to no discourse with your beauty.' This is the sense evidently required. CALDECOTT: 'If you really possess these qualities, chastity and beauty, and mean to support the character of both, your honesty should be so chary of your beauty as not to suffer a thing so fragile to entertain discourse, or to be parleyed with.' The lady, 'tis true, interprets the words otherwise, giving them the turn that best suited her purpose. SINGER: 'Honesty may be corrupted by flattering discourse addressed to beauty.' Ham. remarks respecting women generally. CLARENDON: Hamlet says that honesty or virtue, personified as the guardian of beauty, should allow none, not even himself, to discourse with the latter.

116 and 120. MRS JAMESON (i, 275): Those who ever heard Mrs Siddons read Hamlet cannot forget the world of meaning, of love, of sorrow, of despair, conveyed in these two simple phrases. Here and in lines 155, 156, are the only allusions to herself and her own feelings in the course of the play; and these, uttered almost without consciousness on her own part, contain the revelation of a life of love, and disclose the secret burden of a heart bursting with its own unuttered grief.

breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things that it were better my mother had not borne me; I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in. What should such fellows as I do crawling between heaven and earth? We are arrant knaves all; believe none of us. Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father?

125. beck] Steevens: That is, always ready to come about me. Caldecott: With more vitious dispositions, like evil genii at my elbow, and ready at a nod to start into act, than can be distinctly conceived. Collier (ed. 2): The (MS) has back; one word may have been easily mistaken for the other. Walker (Crit. iii. 266) makes the same emendation, and Lettsom, in a footnote, adds, 'not meaning, I suppose, that Hamlet is loaded with offences; that would require "on my back!" but that he is the leader and disposer of a whole host of offences.'

126. in] Warburton: A word is dropped out; read 'in name.' This was the progress. The offences are first conceived and named, then projected to be put in act, then executed. Heath: I see no business the naming hath to do in this progress. Johnson: 'To put a thing into thought, is to think on it.'

130. father] Grant White (The Case of Hamlet the Younger, The Galaxy, April, 1870, p. 540): There is no warrant for the opinion that Ham. had discovered that the King and Pol. were overhearing him, which indeed is suggested only as a support to the indefensible assumption that Ham. being good at heart, his conduct must have been always thoroughly estimable and consistent; whereas there are no graver offences nor grosser errors than those into which men fall for lack of resolution. Marshall (A Study of Hamlet, p. 28): Ham., before condemning Oph. as an accomplice in the contemptible trick of spying on him, wishes to put her to the plain proof; he therefore turns round and holds out his hand towards her; she, forgetting her part, and thinking, poor girl, that he is going to take her to his breast and forgive her, flies across to him; he checks her with his outstretched hand, and, holding hers, looks straight into her eyes, as only one who loves her has a right to look into a maiden's eyes, and solemnly asks her the question: 'Where is your father?' She falters out her first lie. Then indignation takes the place of sorrow with Ham.
Oph. [Aside] Oh, help him, you sweet heavens!

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry: be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny. Get thee to a nunnery, go; farewell. Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool; for wise men know well enough what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and quickly too. Farewell.

Oph. [Aside] O heavenly powers, restore him!

Throughout the scene he speaks generally.' STEEVENS: See Drayton's Mooncalf [Works, p. 173, b. ed. 1748], where these destructive aids to beauty are satirised. DOUCK (ii, 241): Compare Isaiah, iii, 16. In defence of the Ff, it has not been noticed that 'lisp' seems to refer to pratlings, as 'jig' and 'amble' do to pace. 615, 616, as a proof that Sh. has elsewhere disregarded the exact collocation of words, and also refers to Quintilian for a similar oversight. All edd. who notice this line justify the reading of Q,, even while following the Q,F,F,F in their text.
ROHRBACH, in his clever book, in which, with the utmost gravity, he turns all that Ham.
does or says into ridicule, asserts (p. 136) that the text of Q,F,F,F is correct, and conveys Shakespeare's true meaning: 'Are not Hamlet's bravado and his two conversations with Oph. more in the style of a soldier, bred in the camps of Elizabeth's time, than of a scholar? And is not his sword that of a student—namely, a rapier, with which he is matched against Laertes? Is not his fighting a mere pastime of the fencing school? And when he really fights in earnest, is it not the sword of a scholar that he uses—namely, his tongue? Sh. wears a serious face, but don't trust him; he's laughing in his sleeve.'

pare 2 Hen. IV: ii, iii, 21. TSCHISCHWITZ: 'Mould of form' would be a disagreeable pleonasm, were not 'form' to be understood as equivalent to ceremony, external rites.

156. music-vows] For instances of noun-compounds see ARBOTT, § 430; also, § 22: Music is not commonly used by us as a prefix, unless the suffix is habitually connected with 'music,' thus, 'music-book,' 'music-master,' &c., but not 'music' for musical, as here. CLARENDON: Another mixed metaphor.
158. tune] See Mach. IV, iii, 235, and notes. CORSON: The phrase, 'out of tune,' is certainly an adverbial element to 'jangled,' and not an adjective element to 'sweet bells.' The two ideas attached to 'bells' are: 1. 'jangled out of tune'; 2. 'harsh,' which expresses to what extent 'jangled out of tune.'
159. feature] CALDECOTT: 'The feature and fashion, or the proportion and figure of the whole bodie. Conformatio quedam et figura totius oris et corporis.'—Baret's Alvearie. DVCE (Gloss.): Form, person in general.

Not finding him, she returns, and is greeted with 'How now, Ophelia?' line 178, but is immediately sent away again by her father. 'That Oph. should be present during the King's speech addressed to his confidential counsellor is more than improbable. I have therefore inserted the appropriate stage-directions in the text.' TSCHISCHWITZ: After these words Oph. remains lost in painful thoughts until she is addressed by her father. MILES (p. 43): Oph. is most deject and wretched, but without even a suspicion of being badly treated. Nor is she badly treated. The resentment of neglected love may inflame his dazzling satire, but Destruction for himself and all else around him; but for her the cloister's timely shelter. There is no telling when the fierce wrath may seize him; when he may shake down the pillars of that guilty palace. But not, if he can help it, on her fair head shall the ruin fall! Since the grave is opening for him, let the convent open for her. Not his, but never another's! O wonderful poet! Could she not guess, had she not some shadowy perception of the jealous, selfish, masculine love, which, despite their fell divorce, would wall her from the world, and mark her with the seal of God, to save her from the violation of man?

162. affections] White: This has no relation to love or preference, but refers to the manner in which Hamlet's mind is affected, which affection, or affecting, does not, as the King says, tend towards love.

166. disclose] Steevens: 'Disclose is when the young just peeps through the shell. It is also taken for laying, hatching, or bringing forth young; as "She disclosed three birds."'—R. Holme's Academy of Armory and Blason, b. ii, ch. xi, p. 238. So in The Booke of Huntynge, Hawkyng, Fishtynge: First they ben eges, and after they ben disclosed haukes; and commonly gosehaues, ben disclosed as sone as the choughes.' To exclude is the technical term at present. See V, i, 275. [See I, i, 57; II, i, 4.]

167. for to] White, in his Essay on the Authorship of Henry VI (vol. vii, p. 434), says that this idiom is not to be found in any of Shakespeare's authentick works. Rives [Harness Fisse Essay, p. 19] notes 'but a single authentic instance': viz. Wint. Tale, I, ii, 427. Abbott, § 152, refers to the present passage, and to All's Well, V, iii, 181. Schmidt (Lexicon) furnishes the following in addition: Pass. Pilgrim, 342; Tit. And. IV, iii, 51; IV, ii, 44; Pericles, IV, ii, 71; Ham. I, ii, 175 (Qf). In N. & Qu., 19 Dec. 1874, Rule adds: Tam. of the Sh. III, ii, 249; and Ham. V, i, 91.
For the demand of our neglected tribute;
Haply the seas and countries different
With variable objects shall expel
This something-settled matter in his heart, Whereon his brains still beating puts him thus
From fashion of himself. What think you on’t?

Pol. It shall do well; but yet do I believe
The origin and commencement of his grief
Sprung from neglected love.—How now, Ophelia?
You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said;
We heard it all.—My lord, do as you please;
But, if you hold it fit, after the play,
Let his queen mother all alone entreat him
To show his griefs; let her be round with him;
And I’ll be placed, so please you, in the ear
Of all their conference. If she find him not,
To England send him, or confine him where Your wisdom best shall think.

King. It shall be so;
Madness in great ones must not unwatch’d go.

[Exeunt.]
Scene II. A hall in the castle.

Enter Hamlet and two or three of the Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but use all gently; for in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, whirlwind of your passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Oh, it offends me to the soul to hear a robust-

Stage-direction] Collier: The (MS) adds 'unready' after 'Players,' that is to say, not yet 'tired for the parts they were to fill in the play within a play.

1. Coleridge: This dialogue of Ham. with the Players is one of the happiest instances of Shakespeare's power of diversifying the scene while he is carrying on the plot. Sievers (Hamlet, Leipzig, 1851, note 13, p. 263) maintains that this advice of Ham. to the Player does not apply to acting in general, but only to the acting of the Court-play, and most particularly to the acting of his dozen or sixteen lines, which Sievers conceives to be lines 243-248, 'Thoughts black, hands apt,' &c.

3. Your] Here used ethically; see I, v, 167; also Abbott, § 221.

8. hear] White: I am not sure that the Ff are wrong. See is the verb most commonly applied to the observation of dramatic performances of all kinds. Corner: This is more addressed to the eye than to the ear. His robustiousness and his periwig-patedness are seen alone, as are also the distortions through which he endeavors to exhibit the passion; it is only what he says that is addressed to the ear. [The 'ears of the groundlings' are not 'split' by what they see. Ed.]

8. robustious] For parallel old forms, such as prolixious, stupendious, superbious, and even splendidious, see Walker (Crit. iii, 18).
tious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings, who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb-shows and noise; I could have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing Termagant; it out-herods Herod; pray you avoid it.

9. periwig-pated] STEEVENS: In the time of Sh. players most generally seem to have worn periwigs; wigs were not in common use till the reign of Charles II. In Every Woman in her Humour, 1609: '— as none wear hoods but monks and ladies; and feathers but fore-horses, &c. — none periwigs but players and pictures.' MOBERLY: 'Periwig' is simply an anglicised pronunciation of perruque.

10. groundlings] STEEVENS: In its primitive signification it means a fish, which always keeps at the bottom of the water. In our early play-houses the pit had neither floor nor benches. Hence the term 'groundlings' for those who frequented it. Jonson mentions them with equal contempt: '— the understanding gentlemen of the ground here ask'd my judgement.'—[Bartholomew Fair, Induct. p. 366, Works, ed. Gifford]. There are other derisive allusions to them on the same page and on the next. Ed.] Again: '— give me the penny, I care not for the gentleman, I; let me have good ground.'—The Case is Altered, I, i [p. 327, Works, ed. Gifford].

NARES: From this last extract we see that the price paid by these gentry was then only a penny. See also, in the same play, II, iv [p. 361]. Also: 'Besides, sir, all our galleries and ground-stands are furnished, and the groundlings within the yard grow infinitely unruly.'—Lady Almomy, I, i.

11. inexplicable] JOHNSON: That is, shows without words to explain them.

STEEVENS: Rather, shows which are too confusedly conducted to explain themselves. There is one of these in Heywood's The Four Premiers, 1615, as may be seen from the following: 'Enter Tancred, with Bella Franca richly attired, she somewhat affecting him, though she makes no show of it.' [I, i, p. 442, ed. Dodsley, 1825.] Surely this may be called an inexplicable dumb show.

13. Termagant] STEEVENS: The name (says Percy) given in the old romances to the god of the Saracens; in which he is constantly linked with Mahound or Mohammed. Thus, in the legend of Guy of Warwick, the Soudan swears: 'So help me Mahound of might, And Termagant, my God so bright.' RITSON: 'Grennyng upon her lyke Termagante in a play.'—Bale's Acts of English Votaries, Reliques, i, 77.

NARES: This imaginary personage was introduced into our old plays and moralities, and represented as of a most violent character, so that a ranting actor might always appear to advantage in it. Sh. uses it as an adjective in 1 Hen. IV: V, iv, 114. It is the Trivigante of the Italians, or Tervagant of the French Romancers. Both SINGER and WEDGWOOD cite Florio, 1611: 'Termigito, a great boaster, quarreller, killer, tamer or ruler of the universe; the child of the earthquake and of the thunder, the brother of death.' CLARENDON: Spenser spells it 'Turmagant.' In Sir Benet of Hamtoun, line 659, it is spelled 'Teruagaunt.' It occurs as 'Termag-

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor; suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observance: that you o'er-step not the modesty of nature; for any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and MOBERLY: If the common form, Termagant, be accurate, it is not impossible that the name may be founded on the word Ramazan; the name of the solemnity being imagined to be that of a god worshipped at it, and the letter t being simply the beginning of the r vibration, as it is of the l vibration in such Welsh words as Llangollen.

13. Herod] STEEVENS: The character of Herod in the ancient mysteries was always a violent one. Thus, in The Chester Plays [p. 153, ed. Sh. Soc.], Herod says of himself: 'For I am kinge of all mankinde, I byde, I beate, I lose, I bynde, I maister the moone, take this in mynde, That I am moste of mighte. I am the greateste above degree, That is, that was, that ever shalbe,' &c. Chaucer, speaking of the parish-clerk, Absolon, says: 'He pleyth Herodes vp on a scaffold hye.'—The Miller's Tale—3584, Hengwrt MS. DOUCE gives a long extract from an ancient Pageant, performed at Coventry by the Shearmen and Taylors, in 1534, but the composition of which is of a much earlier date. To illustrate the present passage, and to give an idea of the boundless rant of the braggart tyrant, it is sufficient to cite such lines as these: [I am] the myghtyst conquereoure that eyer walkid on ground; ' All the whole world from the north to the sowthe, I ma them dystroie with won worde of my mouth.' And of his enemies, 'with a twynke of myne eye not won be left alaye.' At one place the stage-direction gives unlimited freedom to the actor to tear a passion to tatters, and to make all split: 'Here Ercole ragis in thys pagond, and in the strete also.'—See Magnus Herodes, in The Towneley Mysteries, p. 140, ed. Surtees Soc.; The Slaughter of the Innocents, in The Coventry Mysteries, p. 183, ed. Sh. Soc.; King Herod, Ibid. p. 291; The Slaughter of the Innocents, in The Chester Plays, p. 172, ed. Sh. Soc.

19. from] For instances of 'from,' meaning apart from, away from, without a verb of motion, see Abbott, § 158; also Macb. III, iv, 36.

20. scorn] Bailey (ii, 9): Why should 'scorn' be antithetic to 'virtue'? It may be on the side of goodness as well as opposed to it. Wherefore read sin, which, spelt sinne as in the old copies of Hamlet, was 'easily pervertible' into scorn.

not read, the face and body, or did Sh. write, the page? The page suits well with 'form' and 'pressure,' but ill with 'body.' STREVENS: The text means: to represent the manners of the time suitable to the period that is treated of, according as it may be ancient or modern. M. MASON: Read, 'every age and body of the time,' and then the sense will be: 'show virtue her own likeness, and every stage of life, every profession or body of men, its form and resemblance.' MALONE: Perhaps Sh. did not mean to connect these words. It is the end of playing, says Hamlet, to show the age in which we live, and the body of the time, its form and pressure; to delineate exactly the manners of the age, and the particular humor of the day.

KIGHTLEY (Exp. 292): We might feel inclined to read world for 'time,' but no change is required. BAILEY (ii, 8): Read visage, which is so near 'every age' in the ductus literarum. Compare 'visage of the times,' 2 Hen. IV: i, iii, 3. SILBERSCHLAG (Morgenblatt, No. 47, 1860, p. 1114): This is essentially the same definition of the drama which Cervantes in Dom Quixote puts into the mouth of the Priest: 'Comedy,' he says, 'according to the opinion of Cicero, should be a mirror of human life, a model of manners, a representation of truth.' Both Sh. and Cervantes clearly drew their definitions from Cicero; Cervantes says so expressly, while Sh. intimates in the phrase, 'both at the first and now,' that he gave an ancient definition of the drama, but he does not mention Cicero's name, because it was not his style, in the works of his riper years, to display his knowledge, or to support his opinions, by the citation of authorities. His use of 'hic et ubique,' in I, v, 156, affords a proof [noted ad loc.] that the end of that scene was written many years earlier than the rest of the drama.

23. pressure] JOHNSON: Resemblance, as in a print. BAILEY (ii, 9): We may obtain something better than Dr Johnson's interpretation by substituting posture for 'pressure;' then we shall really have two distinct things: the shape and the attitude.

CLARENDON: See I, v, 100. So 'impression' in As You Like It, III, v, 23.

23. come] CLARENDON: For a similar use of this participle without 'being' or 'having,' compare R. of L. 1784.

23. tardy of] MASON (p. 387, anticipating WALKER, Crit. iii, 266): That is, come short of. CALDECOTT: Without spirit or animation; heavily, sleepily done. ABBOTT, § 165: 'Off' is perhaps simply of, i.e. 'fallen short of.' Compare ἀπετέλεσθαι. Otherwise, 'come off' is a passive participle.

25. censure] CLARENDON: Judgement, as in I, iii, 69.

25. the which one] CALDECOTT: The judgement of which one class or description of persons ('one of whom' had been more familiar language). DELIUS and CLARENDON understand it as meaning the 'judicious man singly.' TSCHISCHWITZ agrees with Caldecott.

26. there be] For instances of the more common use of be with the plural than the singular, see ABBOTT, § 300.
28. profanely] JOHNSON: This seems to relate, not to the praise which he has mentioned, but to the censure he is about to utter. Any gross or indelicate language was called profane. MASON: This refers to the praise given to the players; Ham. considering it as a kind of profanation to praise persons highly who were so undeserving of it. The construction is 'highly, not to say profanely.' CALDECOTT: Hamlet says that he does not mean to speak profanely by saying that there could be any such thing as a journeyman Creator. [The profanity consists in alluding to Christians. ED.]
30. nor man] COLLIER (ed. 2): Farmer's conj. receives some countenance from Q, The (MS) amends to 'nor man.' WHITE: The reading of the Qq is even more absurd than that of the Ff—as if Christians and pagans were not men! The distinction, Christian, Turk, and Pagan, was not uncommon. See Howell, in Richardson's Dict. s. v. 'pagan.' CLARENDON: This means, nor even man.
31. journeymen] MALONE: The notion of Nature keeping a shop and employing journeymen to form mankind was common in Shakespeare's time. See Lyly's Woman in the Moon, 1597: 'They draw the curtains from before Nature's shop, where stands an image clad and some unclad.'
31. had made them] THEOBALD (S4. Restored, p. 173): According to the Qq and Ff, Hamlet is supposed to reason that because he had seen some very preposterous players, he should think, therefore, that Nature's journeymen had made all mankind, for so men in this place without some or those prefixed must imply. Might not Sh. more probably have written them? [Theobald gives two instances: Love's Lab. Lost, III, i, 25, and Com. of Err. II, ii, 81, where 'them' and the men have been confounded. But as he does not allude to this emendation in his subsequent edition, it is to be presumed that he withdrew it. It is to me, however, so clearly the correct reading that I do not hesitate to follow it, although all other editors except two have adhered to the text of the Qq Ff, which is 'had made men.' RANN adopts Theobald's emendation, and HUDSON adopts Farmer's conj., 'had made the men.' CLARENDON suggests 'em. ED.]
First Play. I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us, sir.

Ham. Oh, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them; for there be of them that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too, though in the mean time some necessary question of the play be then to be considered; that's Villanous, and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready.—

[Execunt Players.

36. clowns] Steevens: Stowe informs us (p. 697, ed. 1615) that among the twelve players who were sworn the queen's servants in 1583, 'were two rare men, viz. Thomas Wilson, for a quick delicate refined extemporall witte; and Richard Tarleton, for a wondrous plointfull, pleasant extemporall witte,' &c. Again, in Tarleton's Neues from Purgatoy: '-----I abstained myself from all plaies, as wanting that merrie Roscius of plaiers that famosed all comedies so with his pleasant and extemporall invention.' This cause for complaint, however, against low comedians is still more ancient; for in The Contention Betwixte Churchyard and Camell, &c., 1560, I find the following passage: 'But Vices in stage plaies, When theyr matter is gon, They laugh out the reste To the lookers on,' &c. Malone: The clown very often addressed the audience in the middle of the play, and entered into a contest of raillery and sarcasm with such of the audience as chose to engage with him. Hunter (ii, 246): There is a remarkable addition at this place in Q, which is not without marks of the hand of Sh. The phrases there found continued to be the stock-wit of the clowns who appeared on the stage of the mountebanks, and who seem silently to have withdrawn themselves about the close of the last century. Collier (ed. 2): The passage in Q, which is mere prose, although chopped up into apparent verse, is curious, because it seems levelled at William Kemp, who about this date quitted the company of players to which Sh. had always belonged. Perhaps, after Kemp rejoined the King's Players (before 1605), the passage was omitted or subduced. We are to bear in mind that Hamlet was probably not composed until the winter of 1601, or the spring of 1602, and it was about this date, that Kemp went over from the Lord Chamberlain's to Lord Nottingham's Players, and of course did his best to promote the success of a competing association. It would, therefore, not be surprising if, besides laying down a general axiom as to the abuse introduced by the performers of the parts of clowns, Sh. had designed a particular allusion to Kemp. White: The passage in Q, was probably an extemporaneous addition to the text by the actor, and had but a passing application. Halliwell is inclined to think that this addition in Q, should be retained in the text.

48. sweet] A common style of address in Elizabethan times. See V, ii, 90.

51. lord] CORSON: The context shows that no interruption, indicated by a dash, is intended. Hor. must be supposed to say 'O my dear lord' in a way expressive of a feeling of being flattered by what Hamlet has just said, uttering 'O' and 'Lord' with a downward circumflex.
No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?
Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
And could of men distinguish, her election Hath seal'd thee for herself; for thou hast been
As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;
A man that fortune's buffets and rewards

55. candied] Dyce (Glos.): Sugared, flattering, glozing. Clarendon: Sh. has unconsciously made a bold use of the figure synecdoche when he makes the 'candied tongue' = crook the hinges of the knee.' Of course, by 'the candied tongue' he really means the flatterer himself. Tschischwitz construes 'crook' as a neuter imperative.

55. absurd] Clarendon: In all other passages Sh. accents this word on the second syllable.

56. pregnant] Johnson: Quick, ready, prompt. Nares: Artful, designing, full of deceit, the ruling sense of this word is being full, or productive of something. Caldecott: 'Pregnant' is bowed, swelled out, presenting themselves, as the form of pregnant animals. Keightley: I see not what 'pregnant' can mean here. It might be better to read phant, or some such word. Clarendon: Lear, iv, 227, and Twelfth Night, iii, 100, support the interpretation, 'ready to bow at the owner's bidding.' In this sense it is opposed to 'stubborn.' See III, iii, 70. ['Pregnant,' because untold thrift is born from a cunning use of the knee. Ed.]

57. fawning] Stratmann: Faining of the Folio is not a misprint, but another form of fauning, just as good, if not better. See Dict. of Old English, s. v. 'faine.'

58. dear] See i, ii, 182.

59. Ritson prefers the Qq, and says that 'distinguish her election' is no more than 'make her election;' distinguish of men is exceeding harsh, to say the best of it. Tschischwitz, however, points out 'distinguish of colours,' 2 Hem. VI: ii, 130. Corson: 'Distinguish her election' is decidedly Shakespearean, and may be what Sh. wrote. The use of a cognate accusative is a marked feature of Shakespeare's diction. [See ii, ii, 27. Ed.]

60—66. For . . . please.] Doering (p. 62): In these lines Ham. delineates, trait by trait, a character the very opposite of his own. Here is to be found the best motto for the tragedy.
HAMLET

Hath ta'en with equal thanks; and blest are those Whose blood and judgement are so well commingled That they are not a pipe for Fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart, As I do thee. Something too much of this. There is a play to-night before the king;
One scene of it comes near the circumstance, Which I have told thee, of my father's death;

64. commingled] Dyce. co-mingled Ff. commixed Qq. commingled Q'76. commended Qo3. comtld Cap. conj.

63. Hath] Corson: Hast of the Qq is a solecism. Though the subject-nominative 'thou' is second person, the predicate-nominative 'man' is third person, and being the antecedent of the relative 'that,' determines the person of the verb to which 'that' is the nominative or subject.

64. blood and judgement] Johnson: According to the doctrine of the four humors, desire and confidence were seated in the blood, and judgement in the phlegm, and the due mixture of the humors made a perfect character. Caldecott: Passions and reason. [See IV, iv, 58.]

66. please] For other instances of 'please' in the subjunctive, see Walker, Crit. i, 207.

68. core] Douce (ii, 245): From this speech Anthony Scoloker, in Daiphantus, or The Passions of Love, 1604, has stolen the following line: 'Oh, I would weare her in my heart's-heart-gore;' whereupon Clarendon asks, should not 'gore' be core?

69. Something, &c.] Clarke: The genuine manliness of this little sentence, where Ham. checks himself when conscious that he has been carried away by fervor of affectionate friendship into stronger protestation than mayhap becomes the truth and simplicity of sentiment between man and man, is precisely one of Shakespeare's exquisite touches of innate propriety in questions of feeling. Let any one, who doubts for a moment whether Sh. intended that Ham. should merely feign madness, read carefully over the present speech, marking its sobriety of expression even amid all its ardor, its singleness and purity of sentiment amid its most forcible utterance, and then decide whether it could be possible that he should mean Hamlet's wits to be touched. That his heart is shaken to its core, that he is even afflicted with melancholia and hypochondria, we admit; but that his intellects are in the very slightest degree disordered, we cannot for one instant believe.

72. thee.] Corson: This comma after 'thee' serves to show that the phrase, 'of my father's death,' is connected with 'circumstance,' and not with 'told,' and, in near pointing, should not be omitted.
I prithee, when thou seest that act a-foot,
Even with the very comment of thy soul
Observe my uncle; if his occulted guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen,
And my imaginations are as foul

74. very comment] CALDECOTT: The most intense direction of every faculty.
74. thy soul] KNIGHT: Hamlet having told Hor. the 'circumstances' of his father's death, and imparted his suspicions of his uncle, entreats his friend to observe his uncle 'with the very comment of my soul,'—Hamlet's soul. To ask Hor. to observe him with the comment of his own soul (Horatio's) is a mere feeble expletive. COLLIER in his first edition also advocated the reading of the Fl, but followed the Qq and the (MS) in his second. DYCE (Remarks, &c., p. 214) criticises the upholders of the text of the Ff in this passage, and says that Knight's text of this tragedy is 'beyond all doubt the worst that has appeared in modern times.' Dyce thinks that the important word 'very,' as Caldecott has interpreted it above, demands 'thy.' CORSON maintains just the opposite; he prefers my, as more expressive. Hamlet's meaning is, I would have thee so enter into my feelings, so identify thyself with me, that when thou seest that act a-foot, even with the very comment of my soul, thou wilt observe my uncle. 'My' also gives force to 'Even with the very,' which has less force in the other reading. DYCE furthermore points out why Ham. wished Hor. to watch his uncle so closely, when he tells him that 'after we will both our judgements join in censure of his seeming.'
75. occulted] CLARENDON: The word seems to occur here only.

79. Vulcan's] DELITS: The connection of thought between Vulcan's realm and the Christian Hell whence the 'damned ghost' issues, is very common among Shakespeare's contemporaries.
79. stithy] THEOBALD substituted Smithy, on the ground that 'stithy' meant an anvil, and 'an anvil is far from being the dirtiest thing in a smith's shop.' But CALDECOTT says that stithy, stite, and stith were the same, and used indifferently to express either the iron to work upon, or the forge, or the workshop; though in later times stith has been confined to the sense of anvil, and 'stithy' to that of shop.

Sh. employs 'idle' in the sense of mad several times; among others see Q, [line

MOBERLY: I am mad, and therefore not answerable for what I said a minute ago.

93. university] COLERIDGE: To have kept Hamlet's love for Ophelia before the audience in any direct form, would have made a breach in the unity of interest;—but yet to the thoughtful reader it is suggested by his spite to poor Polonius, whom he can not let rest. FARMER infers that the common players were occasionally admitted to perform in the universities on the strength of an application for that purpose in Vice Chancellor Hatcher's Letters to Lord Burghley, 1580. But CALDECOTT thinks this extract merely shows that applications of this sort were occasionally made; not that they were accepted; on the contrary, the governors were always disposed to find reasons for rejecting them. Wherefore, in the absence of direct evidence, Caldecott thinks that the probability of stage plays having been performed in the universities by professed actors is strongly negatived. That he was mistaken will be seen from the reference to Q, by Clarendon. MALONE: The practice of acting Latin plays in the universities of Oxford and Cambridge is very ancient, and continued to near the middle of the last century. They were performed occasionally for the entertainment of princes and other great personages; and regularly at Christmas, at which time a Lord of Misrule was appointed at Oxford, to regulate the exhibitions, and a similar officer with the title of Imperator at Cambridge. The most celebrated actors at Cambridge were the students of St John's and King's colleges: at Oxford those of Christ-Church. In the hall of that college a Latin comedy called Marcus Geminus, and the Latin tragedy of Progne, were performed before Queen Elizabeth in the year 1566; and in 1564, the Latin tragedy of Dido was played before Her Majesty, when she visited the university of Cambridge. on Sunday evening, Aug. 6, Queen Elizabeth saw the Aulularia of Plautus in the antechapel of King’s College Chapel. On the occasion of the visit of James I and Prince Charles to Cambridge in 1614 plays were performed in the Hall of Trinity College; among them the comedies of Ignoramus and Alhunusar, which have escaped oblivion. On the title-page of Q, it is said, ‘As it hath beene diverse times acted by his Highnesse servants in the Cittie of London: as also in the tow Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, and else where.’

96. enact] Delius recognises in this word that affected style of speech in which Hamlet purposely addressed Polonius. Corson: The Ff reading has a touch of the contemptuous imparted to it by the initial word ‘And!’ ‘What, I pray, or for sooth, did you enact?’

97. Cæsar] Malone: A Latin play on the subject of Cæsar’s death was performed in Oxford in 1582; and several years before a Latin play on the same subject, by Jacques Grevin, was acted in the college of Beauvais, at Paris. I suspect that there was likewise an English play on the story of Cæsar before the time of Sh. Clarendon: It is now known that a piece called Cæsar’s Fall was played in 1602 by Antony Munday, Drayton, Webster, Middleton, and others, and it is probable that the Cæsarius Cæsar of Sh. may have appeared as early as 1601.

97. Capitol] Malone: The erroneous notion that Julius Cæsar was killed in the Capitol is as old as Chaucer. [See note on ‘bodkin,’ III, i, 76.] Clarendon: The mistake is repeated in Cæsarius Cæsar. Cæsar was assassinated in the Curia Pompeii, near the theatre of Pompey in the Campus Martius.

99. brute] Steevens: Sir John Harrington in his Metamorphosis of Ajax, 1596, has the same quibble. Lamb (iii, 94, ed. 1870): Among the distinguishing features of that wonderful character [Hamlet], one of the most interesting (yet painful) is that soreness of mind which makes him treat the intrusions of Pol. with harshness. . . . These tokens of an unhinged mind . . . are parts of his character, which to reconcile with an admiration of him, the most patient consideration of his situation is no more than necessary; they are what we forgive afterwards, and explain by the whole of his character, but at the time they are harsh and unpleasant. Yet such is the actor’s necessity of giving strong blows to the audience, that I have never seen a player in this character who did not exaggerate and strain to the utmost these ambiguous features,—these temporary deformities in the character. They make him express a vulgar scorn at Pol., which utterly degrades his gentility, and which no explanation can render palatable; they make him show contempt, and curl up the

As much as to say—Let the devil wear black for me, I'll have none. JOHNSON: I cannot see why Hamlet, when he laid aside his dress of mourning, in a country where it was bitter cold, and the air nipping and eager, should not have a suit of sables. I suppose it is well enough known that the fur of sables is not black. CAPPELL (Notes, &c., 1, 136): It is scarce worth remarking, being a fact of such notoriety, that 'sables,' the furs so called, are the finery of most northern nations; so that Hamlet's saying amounts to a declaration, that he would leave off his blacks, since his father was so long dead. HEATH (p. 538): The sense seems to be: If this be the case, let the devil wear plain black; I'll get me a suit of sables, which, from their colour, will have the appearance indeed of mourning, but at the same time will indulge my appetite for finery and ornament to the utmost. FARMER: There is an equivogue here. In Massinger's Old Law, we have: 'A cunning grief That's only faced with sables for a show, But gaudy-hearted.' MALONE: By the Statute of Apparel, 24 Henry VIII, c. 13 (article furres), it is ordained that none under the degree of an earl may use sables. Bishop says, in his Blossoms, 1577, speaking of the extravagance of those times, that a thousand ducates were sometimes given for 'a face of sables.' CALDECOTT thinks that by the 'devil' Hamlet would have it understood that he meant his uncle. WIGHTWICK (The Critic, 1854, p. 317; cited in N. & Qu., 18 July, 1857) maintains that the contrast here is of color, not of material, 'Let the devil wear black; I'll wear a color of all others most oppugnant to sorrow' And having found in Peacham some 'directions for painting or coloring of cuts and pictures,' wherein the definitions are given of certain colors, among them 'Sabell color, i. e. flame-color,' he infers that Ham. here says, 'I'll have a suit of sabell,' i. e. of flame color. 'A misspelling,' he adds, 'has produced all the previous confusion about this passage, and we may reasonably conclude that a different pronunciation distinguished the sable meaning black, and sabell meaning flame color.' DELIUS: 'Sables' indicated that the period of mourning was over. DYCE: Another correspondent in The Critic, 1854, p. 373, observes that 'sabell,' or 'sabelle,' is prop

ery a fawn-color a good deal heightened with red, and that the term came from the French 'couleur d'isabelle'-According to the Dict. de l'Acad. Fr., 'isabelle' is a color 'entre le blanc et le jaune, mais dans lequel le jaune domine. Il se dit surtout du poil des chevaux.' STAUTON, who thought that Warburton's emendation was possibly right, says that 'it is not at all improbable that in the scene before us Hamlet was intended to accompany these words with the action of flinging off his mourning cloak. WHITE thinks 'for,' of the QqFf, 'a trifling variation from the true text [viz. 'fore'] hardly to be called a corruption. HALLIWELL: Shakespeare's intention was most likely to make Ham. here speak incoherently. If this be not the case, some sort of meaning may be elicited in this way: 'nay, then let the devil wear black, for even I will have a suit of mourning; if I wear one, the devil himself may.' KIGHTLEY [reading, 'I'll not have a suit,' &c.]: When the critics shall have proved,—which they have not done yet,—that a dress trimmed with sable was called 'a suit of sables,' I will grant that Hamlet did not mean mourning, and that the negative is not needful. ELSE [Sh. Jahrbuch, Bd. xi]: The constrast between a suit of sables and a black mourning garment lies not in the color, but in the costliness and splendor of the material. In accordance with the immemorial biblical usage of mourning in sackcloth and ashes, mourning garments to this day are made of coarse and harsh material, whereas for the trimming of a suit of sable the most gorgeous and brilliant stuff was selected.

125. not thinking on] KNIGHT: He shall suffer being forgotten.

126. hobby-horse] WARBURTON: Amongst the country May-games there was a hobby-horse, which, when the puritanical humor of those times opposed and discredited these games, was brought by the poets and ballad-makers as an instance of the ridiculous zeal of the sectaries; from these ballads Ham. quotes a line or two. NAES: A small horse; also a personage belonging to the ancient morris-dance, when complete, and made, as Mr Bayes's troops are on the stage, by the figure of a horse fastened round the waist of a man, his own legs going through the body of the horse, and enabling him to walk, but concealed by a long foot-cloth; while false legs appeared where those of the man should be, at the sides of the horse. Latterly the hobby-horse was frequently omitted, which appears to have occasioned a popular ballad, in which was the line now quoted by Ham. It is also quoted in Love's Lab. III, i, 30. DUVY adds to this note of NAES: Many readers will probably recollect the spirited description of the Hobby-horse in Scott's Monastery; but, since Mr Bayes's troops have been long banished from the stage, it may be necessary to mention here that they are part of the dramatis persona in the Duke of Buckingham's once-celebrated satirical play called The Rehearsal. COLLIER: A ballad seems to have been written on the omission of the Hobby-horse in May-games. 'The

127. The dumb-show] Pye: This appears to contain every circumstance of the murder of Hamlet's father. Now there is no apparent reason why the Usurper should not be as much affected by this mute representation of his crimes as he is afterwards when the same action is accompanied by words. The subsequent conversation between Hamlet and Ophelia precludes the possibility of its having been a kind of direction to the players only. Caldecott: Since the usage of the time warranted, and, as it would seem, even demanded this dumb-show, how could it have been omitted? Hamlet, intent on 'catching the conscience of the king,' would naturally wish that his 'mouse-trap' should be doubly set; and could never be supposed willing to relinquish any one of those engines, the use of which custom had authorized. The King, in fact, takes alarm at the thought that the subject is to be afterward brought forward in plain terms in the play, and expresses his apprehension of 'offence in that argument,' of which he was already in possession; and at this, indeed, he 'blanches.' Knight: Mute exhibitions, during the time of Sh., and before and after, were often introduced to exhibit such circumstances as the limits of a play would not admit to be represented. We presume, however, that Sh. had here some stage authority for making the dumb-show represent the same action that is indicated in the dialogue. His dramatic object is [pointed out by Caldecott]. Hunter (ii, 249): To represent the story of a play in dumb-show when the play itself is going to be performed appears a most extraordinary mode of procedure, and nothing like it has been traced in the usages of the English theatre, or, I believe, in the theatres of the more polished nations of Europe. What approach nearest to it, and may by some be mistaken for it, are the Dumb Shows in Sackville's Gerboduc and Gascoign's Jocasta. But whoever considers these shows attentively will perceive that they are something essentially different from the exhibition of the very action which is immediately to follow with the accompanying dialogue. They are, in fact, but so many moralizations, resembling the choruses of the Greek drama, the moral lessons being read in action, rather than in words. I do not recollect any other English play with a dumb-show even of this kind; and Ophelia's questions, 'What means this, my lord?' and 'Will he tell us what this show means?' prove that shows such as these made no part of the common dramatic entertainments of England. [Gascoign's instructions respecting the dumb-shows in Jocasta are here given, to show how utterly unlike they are to this in Hamlet. No one has hitherto hit upon the true origin of the show in Hamlet. It seems that such strange and unsuitable anticipations were according to the common practice of the Danish theatre. I first became acquainted with this fact, which appears to explain what without it appears to carry absurdity as far as it will go, when reading an unpublished diary of the seventeenth century, the writer of which relates that about the close of the year 1688 there landed at Hull about six thousand Danish soldiers, who were dispersed in the neighboring towns. Some of them were quartered at the little town of Hatfield, near Doncaster, near to which the writer of the diary lived, who, having given some general account of their habits, proceeds thus:—'Many of them while they stayed here acted a play in their language, and they got a vast deal of money thereby. The design of it was Herod's Tyranny, the Birth of Christ, and the Coming of the Wise Men. They built a stage in our large court-house, and acted the same thereon. I observed that all the postures were shown first, namely, the king on his throne, his servants standing about him; and then, the scenes being drawn, another posture came, the barbarous soldiers murdering the infants, and so on; and when they had run through all so, they then began to act both together. All which time they had plenty of all sorts of music of themselves, for [one] soldier played on one sort, and one another. I heard som. of them say that some of these players belonged to the King of Denmark's play-house, that was set a fire and burnt when most of the nobles were beholding a play several years ago.' The writer of this diary was Abraham de la Pryme. Halliwell: I cannot say that I am satisfied with the explanation [given by Caldecott and Knight], although it is certainly ingenious. If the King had seen the dumb-show, he must have known that there was offence in it. Is it allowable to direct that the King and Queen should be whispering confidentially to each other during the dumb-show, and so escape a sight of it?

129. miching mallecho] Hamer defines the first word as 'secret, covered, lying hid;' and the second as 'a wicked act, a piece of iniquity.' Span. mallecho; Warburton maintains that the phrase means: 'Lying in wait for the poisoner.' And that it should therefore read: 'miching Malhechor;' and so introduces it in his text. Henley very properly points out that malhechor no more means a poisoner than the perpetrator of any other crime. Grey (ii, 296) Why may not Sh. have wrote miching Malbecco, from Spenser's description of him, Fairy Queene, iii, cantos 9, 10? Farmer (cited by Steevens): Were not these obscure words originally: 'This is mimicking Malbecco,' a private gloss by a friend on the margin of the MS Hamlet, and thence ignorantly received into the text? Heath: To mich is a word still in common use in the western part of this island, and signifies, to lurk, to do mischief, under a fair external appearance. Capell (Notes, i, 136): This is said of the person of the Poisoner in the Dumb Show, a representative of the King, who was a man of mean figure (see III, iv, 64), and is therefore compared by the speaker to the character called Iniquity, in the ancient moralities, whose figure (it is like) was the same, an ill-looking, munching animal. Malone: In Norfolk mickers signify pilferers. The signification of miching in the present passage may be ascertained by a passage in Decker's Wonderful Yeares, 1603: 'Those that could shift for a time,—went most bitterly miching and muffled, up and downe, with rue and wormwood stuff into their eyes and nostrills.' See also Florio, Accipiamare: 'To mische, to shrug or sneake in some corner.' Caldecott: Mychyn or stelyn pryuely.

—Prompt. Parl. Knight: The skulking crime pointed out in the Dumb Show is, in one sense of Hamlet's wild phrase, miching malhecho; his own secret purpose, from which mischief will ensue, is miching mallecho, in another sense;—in either case 'it means mischief.' Maginn (Fraser's Maga. Dec. 1839): In the Qq we find the traces of the true reading: mucho malhecho, much mischief. Dyce (Gloss.): 'Malhecho. . . . An evil action, an indecent and indecorous behaviour; malefaction.'—Connelly's Span. and Engl. Dict. Madrid. Compare: 'Theo. Be humble, Thou man of mallecho, or thou diest.'—Shirley's Gentleman of Venice; Works, vol. v, p. 52. Maginn's alteration is doubtless wrong. Keithley did not think so; he adopted it. Clarendon: Minsheu (The Guide into Tongues) gives, 'To Mice, or secretly to hide himself out of the way, as Truants doe from schoole.' Mackay (Athenaum, 16 Oct. 1875) says that it is to the wooing of the Queen by the Poisoner that Ham. refers as meaning mischief, not to the murder; in the latter the mischief is past, in the former it is to come. This is the clue which reveals the HALLIWELL: These posies were necessarily brief, e.g. ‘I cannot show, the love I O;’ ‘God above, increase our love;’ ‘God’s blessing be, with thee and me;’ ‘Let love abide, till death divide.’ These are from rings of the Shakespearian period. CAMBRIDGE EDITORS: As the line in the Qq occurs at the top of the page, the omission [conjectured by Johnson, Jennens, and others] is more likely to have been caused by a line having dropped out at the foot of the previous page. The Quarto probably gives us the author's first thought, incomplete, as well as the lines he finally adopted, as they stand in the Folio. The thought will hardly bear to be expanded over four lines. TSCHISCHWITZ retains the line from the Qq, and in order to do so 'without hesitation' supplies the missing phrase thus: 'Either none at all or one man all above; And women's fear,' &c.

176. 177. speak . . . break] Clarendon: Observe the rhyme.
178–203. Steevens (Hamlet, p. 142, Leipzig, 1851) was, I believe, the first to point out the dozen or sixteen lines which Ham. had promised to insert in the play; and he supposed them to be lines 243–248, but Mr and Mrs Cowden Clarke, in their ed., believe that they are to be found in the present passage; because; the diction is different from the remainder of the dialogue, and is signally like Hamlet’s own argumentative mode. ‘This world is not for aye,’ the thoughts upon the fluctuations of ‘love’ and ‘fortune,’ and the final reflection upon the contrary current of ‘our wills and fates,’ with the overthrow of our ‘devices,’ and the ultimate diversity between our intentions and their ‘ends,’ are as if proceeding from the Prince himself. His motive in writing these additional lines for insertion, and getting the player to deliver them, we take to be a desire that they shall serve to divert attention from the special passages directed at the King, and to make these latter seem less pointed. We have fancied that this is Shakespeare’s intention, because of the emphatic variation in the style just here. Observe how very different are the mythological allusions to ‘Phæbus,’ ‘Neptune,’ &c., and the stiff inversions of ‘about the world have times twelve thirties been,’ ‘discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must,’ &c.; and, moreover, observe how exactly the couplet commencing the Player-King’s speech, ‘I do believe,’ &c., and the couplet concluding it, ‘So think thou wilt,’ &c., would con-join were the intervening lines omitted. To the same effect Tschischwitz, who finds in lines 194–199 an allusion to Ros. and Guild; see II, ii, 346–349. A [178-203. the dozen or sixteen lines.] discussion as to whether or not these were Hamlet's dozen or sixteen lines was started by a note from Furnivall in The Academy, 3 Jan. 1874, to the effect that both Seeley and himself, independently and without any knowledge of Clarke's note on the subject, had hit upon these lines as those written by Ham. The dis-465, and as it there takes up some thirty or more pages, a mere digest of it can be given here. Malleson contends that these are not the lines written by Ham. 1.
They do not apply to the King's character or position, but rather to Ham. himself.
2. There is nothing in them of the torrent, tempest, and whirlwind of passion that Ham. was so anxious should not be torn to tatters. And, lastly, there was one scene which Ham. tells Hor. is to be the test, during which he is to watch the King with every faculty of his being, while Ham. will do the same during one speech.
Beyond doubt the scene is where poison is poured into the Player-King's ear, and here, likewise, at the crisis of the plot is to be found the speech, viz. 'Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit,' &c., and this is Hamlet's addition to the play. Had the King not bleneched, we should have had probably the rest of the dozen lines, which might have contained a hint of the Poisoner's next aim, the seduction to a sudden second marriage of the seeming-virtuous Queen. It was the success of this alteration or addition that Ham. declared would get him a fellowship in a cry of players, and this success was due to the 'talk of the poisoning;' and this 'talk of the poisoning' is found only in this speech of Lucianus. Seeley, on the other hand, believed that the dozen or sixteen lines were some of those which make up the long speech beginning 'I do believe you think what now you speak.' To avoid conjecture as much as possible, we must consider two characteristics which the inserted speech must necessarily have: 1. It must consist of some dozen or sixteen lines. 2. Being an insertion, it must be such a speech as can be removed without affecting the action of the play. Now, these two characteristics belong to this speech of the Player-King, and to it alone. It is exceptionally long, and the whole of it could not be spared, but it is quite easy to spare about a dozen or sixteen lines from the middle of it, and such a retrenchment would bring the speech to about the average length of the other speeches. There is no reason why Ham. should make his lines 'charge the King with murder, or to drive the moral of the play home to the King's conscience.'* The play might be trusted to do that; no speech could make the application plainer. It is impossible for the speech beginning 'Thoughts black,' &c., to be the inserted speech, because it satisfies none of the conditions. It is not a dozen or sixteen lines, but only six;
it is not an inserted speech, but belongs essentially to the action. It is also impossible to suppose exactly that it was broken off by the King's rising, for the six lines in question form only one sentence, and must therefore belong entirely to the play itself in its original form, unless the murder were to be done in dumb show, which nobody supposes. His uncle's guilt is by no means the absorbing topic of Hamlet's thoughts; it is an annoying subject that weighs upon his mind without interesting it, and his only desire is to postpone and keep at arm's length everything connected with it, and with his duty to punish it. His real feeling for his uncle is only contempt, as for a vulgar knave, whom there is no satisfaction in thinking about,—and it would be source of wonder if he should think about him enough to take the trouble to write a dozen or sixteen lines to make clear what was already as clear as the day. But the subject that really does fill Hamlet's mind, to the exclusion of what ought to engage his attention more, is his mother, and she it is with whom these inserted lines deal. From what we know of Hamlet's feelings she would be, a priori, the subject of his inserted speech. Furthermore, if the speech were about the murder, it would be of no help in the progress of the play, nothing would be revealed to us by it. Whereas, if the speech dealt with the mother, it would be a broad hint to us not to trust Hamlet's professions, and that the experiment of the play, with all its parade of ingenuity and of vengeance to follow, is a mere blind by which Ham. hides both from himself and Hor. that he does not intend to act at all, but will go on for ever brooding over the frailty of his mother and of all womankind. To this Malleson rejoins: Ham. never says he has written a passage of so many lines, but that he intended to write some uncertain number, a dozen or sixteen. When he sat down with the play before him, he may have written twenty or twenty-six, and indeed, if the Player-King's speech be accepted as partly Hamlet's, all of it might be claimed for him except the first two and the last two lines, which, omitting the intervening twenty-six, go fairly together. There is no reason why the inserted lines must be such as can be removed without affecting the play; may not Ham. have substituted his lines for those which he struck out? If lines 178–203 were made, as Seeley contends, to catch the conscience of the Queen, there appears to be in them when closely analyzed nothing with any special reference to her, and accordingly she is perfectly unmoved by them; her response, when appealed to by Hamlet as to how she likes the play, betokens perfect self-possession. Afterwards, to be sure, she is thrown into 'most great affliction of spirit,' but it is entirely on her husband's account,—as far as she was concerned, this speech was pointless. Grant that the plot of the play, by itself, sufficiently emphasized the King's guilt, there is nothing unnatural in Hamlet's wishing to make assurance doubly sure. In Seeley's final remarks he admitted that Hamlet's instructions to the Player suggest a speech that is in some sense passionate, but that in reality Ham. takes the occasion of a particular speech to give a general lecture on elocution, or on the general way in which a passion should be expressed. And these lines, which may appear tame to us, may have borne a much more intense feeling to Ham. The insertion is introduced to tell us something about Ham. that we should not otherwise have known. Its object was not to catch the conscience of the Queen, but to give us an additional insight into the dreamy, unpractical character of Ham. He had been from the first brooding over his mother's conduct, and the play offers him an opportunity to relieve his feelings; the lines may not produce much effect upon her,—he knows how unimpressionable she is,—but his object will be gained if he only writes them. Furnivall sums up: Technically, Seeley's position is very strong, but 'on the merits' he breaks down,—he has a capital case at Law, but none in Equity. I cannot resist Malleson's argument, that Hamlet's inserted speech is the one speech in which he tells Hor. the King's guilt is to unkennel itself. But I hold very strongly that Lucianus's speech is not the speech, and that, in fact, the speech is not in the printed play. Either the King's conscience was more quickly stung than Ham. anticipated, and so the written speech was never needed; or (as Mr Matthew has suggested) Sh. contented himself with showing us, or letting us assume, that Ham. altered the play, and put his 'dozen or sixteen lines' into action instead of [178-203. the dozen or sixteen lines.] words; if he had not modified the play, what credit could he have claimed for himself as a play-writer or adapter. The inconsistency of Shakespeare's having made Hamlet first talk so much about inserting a speech, and then leaving it out after all, is what one might fairly expect in the recast Hamlet after its other startling inconsistencies, e.g. Hamlet's age and Ophelia's suicide. What can it matter whether an actual speech of a dozen or sixteen lines, though often annoucnt, be really in the play or not? Simpson calls attention to the fact that just as the historical drama takes for granted those events which are made known by previous allusions, so the sub-play generally omits all those details which have been previously described or alluded to. Thus in Mid. N. D. we have both the play as presented before Theseus and a rehearsal of it. The lines rehearsed are different from any in the actual play.

Looking at the practice of the time and at the previous likelihoods of the case, I see no reason whatever for expecting to find that Sh. would have put into the sub-play the dozen lines that he makes Ham. promise. Bathurst (p. 70) says that he sees 'no symptoms of the lines which Ham. was to insert.' Germinus (2te Band, p. 102, 3te Auflage) believes that Sh. meant the passage from line 177 to 187 to apply to Ham. 'Indeed, Gonzago acted the part of Hamlet's father. Ham. as well as his mother must have a taste of "wormwood."' My friend Dr lngley has kindly sent me extracts from a Paper on this subject, which is announced for reading to the New Shakspeare Society, 9 February, 1877. In these extracts Dr lngley dissents from all that has been assumed heretofore on this subject in that Society's Transactions, and maintains his own view, very briefly thus: The court-play is but a part of Hamlet; that Ham. writes no speech at all, whether of six, twelve, or sixteen lines, nor recites such a speech; Sh. simply wrote the entire play, not writing any additions in personá Hamlet, still less writing an addition to a play which he had previously written in the character of the author of an Italian morality. To trace into its issues every suggestion in the play, so that the event should justify the hint, is 'to consider too curiously.' A drama is a work of art, a contrivance for imposing upon the spectator, causing him to take no account of actual time, place, and circumstance, making him almost forget that he is in a play-house. In real life a Hamlet might compose and insert a few lines to add point and force to an ordeal, like that of the court-play, to which the fictitious Hamlet subjects the supposed criminal; and if we had the play before us, we might detect the insertion by means of our various tests of metre, phraseology, &c. If we failed to discover the added lines, the fault is ours; the lines would be there. Now to suppose that Sh. in composing Hamlet followed out the exact course that a real living prince would have followed, is to impute to him a lack of the simplest art of the playwright, and a neglect of the artifices which the drama places at his command. Whereas, Shakespeare's procedure was probably this: In the course of enlarging the first sketch of his Hamlet he conceived the design of making it a vehicle for the highest possible instruction in the art of elocution. The play-scene was already devised, and he had, therefore, to introduce the Players as arriving at Elsinore. Here was the chance he wanted. He would make Ham. instruct the Player, and through him all players, how to act. But how was this to be brought about? Ham. could hardly be supposed to know by heart the roles of a strolling player. Wherefore, Sh. makes Ham. speak as if he had already recited to the Player a speech of his own composition, and hereupon give his instructions. Thus, having found or made the occasion, Sh. had to prepare the audience for the supposed recitation, and this was done by representing Ham. at a former interview imparting to the old Player his intention of writing ‘a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines’ (i.e. a speech of several lines) for insertion in The Murder of Gonzago. But all the while Shakespeare’s object (kept wholly out of view) was to prepare the audience for his own lesson (voce Hamlet) on elocution. It is a rule of dramatic art that, a dramatic expedient not essential to the plot, introduced for a collateral object, is to be left out of consideration as soon as that object is attained. As soon, therefore, as Ham. has given the old Player his lesson, the dramatic need of the ‘dozen or sixteen lines’ is satisfied, and we have no further concern with them. The suggestion, however, served (1) to prepare the way for Hamlet’s advice; (2) to suggest the possibility, vague to the last degree, that Ham. had the old play touched and tinkered to suit his purpose more completely. The phrase, ‘some dozen or sixteen,’ does not mean what it says; it is even more indefinite than ‘ten or a dozen,’ or ‘a dozen or fourteen,’ which Mrs Quickly uses in Hen. V: II, I; the prefix ‘some’ adds vagueness to what was vague already. These lines, by the very nature of the case, can never have been in Hamlet. [It is to task the credulity of an audience too severely to represent the possibility of Hamlet’s finding an old play exactly fitted to Claudius’s crime, not only in the plot, but in all the accessories, even to a single speech which should tent the criminal to the very quick. In order, therefore, to give an air of probability to what every one would feel to be thus highly improbable, Sh. represents Ham. as adapting an old play to his present needs by inserting in it some pointed lines. Not that such lines were actually inserted, but, mindful of this proposal of Hamlet’s, the spectator is prepared to listen to a play which is to unmask the King’s occulted guilt in a certain speech; the verisimilitude of all the circumstances is thus maintained. No matter how direct or pointed the allusion to the King’s guilt may be, we accept it all, secure under Shakespeare’s promise that the play shall be made to hit Claudius fatally. And we hear the fulfillment of this promise in Hamlet’s cry of exultation over the success of his attempt at play-writing. The discussion, therefore, that has arisen over these ‘dozen or sixteen lines’ is a tribute to Shakespeare’s consummate art. Ingleby, I think, is right in maintaining that Sh. did not first write The Murder of Gonzago, and then insert in it certain lines, as though written by Hamlet. And Sievers, the Clarke’s, Malleson, and others are also right, I think, in believing that certain lines of the court-play are especially applicable to Claudius, and which we may imagine are those that Ham. told the Player he would give him. It is the very impression which, I think, Sh. wished to convey. Ed.]

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The Mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna; Gonzago is the duke’s name; his wife, Baptista; you shall see anon; ’tis a knavish piece of work; but what o’ that? your 230 majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung.—

224. offence ] DELIUS: Here again, as before in I, v, 137, this word is used in a double sense. The King is a moral ‘offence,’ and Hamlet is a physical ‘offence,’ or crime.

227. Tropically ] CALDECOTT: Figuratively, by a trope or turn we give things. Hunter (ii, 282): Tropically of Q is an unmeaning word, except that we may see a faint shade of meaning in the play being a figurative representation of an actual deed, and this, combined with the opportunity of playing on the word trap, is the true reason that we meet with this word thus oddly introduced.

228. image ] See Mach. II, iii, 74.

228. Vienna ] COLLIER: The Guiana of Q, perhaps arose from the shorthand-writer having misheard the name.

229. duke’s ] HUNTER (ii, 252): Q explains why everywhere else he is a king. The character was a duke throughout, as the play was originally written, and when king was to be substituted for duke, this passage remained by some accident uncorrected. Walker (Crit. ii, 281) shows by many instances that kings, duke, and count were confounded in sense, and that to the poet they were one and the same, all involving alike the idea of sovereign power; and thus might easily be confounded with each other in the memory.

229. Baptista ] JOHNSON: In Italian, I think, the name always of a man. Ritson: I believe it is never used singly, but compounded with Gian (for Giovanni), and meaning, of course, John the Baptist. HUNTER (ii, 252): I have seen a few instances in which the name was borne by women in England. Sh. was not solicitous about it. It had a feminine termination; that was enough.

Again, in Greene's Greatworth of Wit, 1621: 'It was I that... for seven years' space was absolute interpreter of the puppets.'

236. puppets dallying] Seymour (ii, 179): If I could observe the agitations of your bosom. Nakes: Synonymous with the babies in the eyes.

237. keen] Hunter (ii, 252): There is no appropriateness in this as a reply to what Hamlet had said, and it is, in fact, an observation on something said by him that is now transposed to another part of the play. This we learn from Q, where the remarks of Ham. to Oph. on the cheerful appearance of his mother occur in this part of the dialogue. It is in reference to these satirical remarks about his mother that Ophelia says, 'You are keen,' or as it reads in Q.

239. worse] Caldecott: More keen and less decorous.

240. must take] Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 90): Hamlet certainly alludes to the church-service of matrimony, where the husband and wife promise alternately to take each other for 'better for worse.' [Theobald changed his mind when he came to print his edition; for there he follows the QFf, and paraphrases: 'So you take Husbands, and find yourselves mistaken in them.'] The majority of notes on this passage are in favor of the reading of the QFf. Those edd. who have followed the reading of Q, have been apparently so firmly fixed in their belief in the excellence of that text in this passage, that they have not thought it worth while to vindicate it. Steevens: Again, in Jonson's Masque of Augurs: 'To mistake six torches from the chandry, and give them one.' Again, in The Elder Brother of Fletcher: 'I fear he will persuade me to mistake him.' Again, in Chrestoleros; Seven Books of Epigrams, written by T. B. [Thomas Bastard], 1598, lib. vii, epig. xviii: '—For none that see'ah her face and making, Will judge her stolne, but by mistaking.' Again, in Questions of Profitable and Pleasant Concernings, 1594: 'Better I were now and then to suffer his remissee mother to mistake a quarter or two of com.' Tollet: The meaning is: 'You do amiss for yourselves to take husbands for the worse. You should take them only for the better.' Caldecott: In these very terms of confusion and contradiction it is that you make up what you call your solemn contract of marriage. For 'mistake' = wrongly judged of, see Hen. VIII: III, i, 101. Singer: Hamlet puns upon the word mistake; 'So you mis-take, or take your husbands amiss for better and worse.' The word was often thus misused for anything done wrongfully, and even for privy stealing.

241. Poe] Dyce: Need I observe that, in Shakespeare's time, this imprecation undoubtedly referred to the small-pox?

242. revenge] Collier: This perhaps was a quotation from some other play in Hamlet's memory. Dyce (Remarks, &c., p. 215): Ham. seems to mean: 'Begin without more delay; for the raven, prescient of the deed, is already croaking, and, as it were, calling out for the revenge which will ensue.' Simpson (The Academy, 19 Dec. '74): Ham. rolls into one two lines of an old familiar play: The True Tragedie of Richard the Third (p. 61, Sh. Soc. Reprint). The king is describing the terrors of his conscience: 'Methinks their ghosts comes gaping for revenge Whom I have slain in reaching for a crown;' and of the two lines that follow, Hamlet's speech is a satirical condensation: 'The screeking raven sits croaking for revenge Whole herds of beasts comes bellowing for revenge.'

244. confederate] Tschischwitz [following Qq]: 'Confederate is clearly the wrong reading, since it merely expresses what is already implied in 'time agreeing.'

262. So] CORSON: The more general and indefinite 'So' seems preferable here to the formal 'Thus.'
Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers,—if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me,—with two Provincial roses on my razed shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, 265 sir?

263. feathers] MALONE: It appears from Decker’s Gut’s Hornbooke that feathers were much worn on the stage in Shakespeare’s time.

264. turn Turk] STEEVENS: See Much Ado, III, iv, 57; and, in Greene’s To Quoque, 1614: ‘This it is to turn Turk, from an absolute and most compleat gentleman, to a most absurd, ridiculous, and fond lover.’ It means no more than to change condition fantastically. CALDECOTT: To undergo a total and ruinous change.

264. Provincial] WARTON: Hamlet means the roses of Provence, a beautiful species; therefore read Provincial [CAPELL, MALONE, and STEEVENS adopted this reading] or Provincial. DOUCE: Change is unnecessary. There is no evidence that Provence was ever remarkable for its roses; whereas, Provins, about forty miles from Paris, was formerly very celebrated for the growth of this flower, which, according to tradition, was imported into that country from Syria by a Count de Brie.

JOHNSON: When shoe-strings were worn they were covered, where they met in the middle, by a ribbon gathered in the form of a rose. CLARENDON: Cotgrave gives both localities: ‘Rose de Provence. The Province Rose, the double Damaske Rose,’ and ‘Rose de Provins. The ordinarie double red Rose.’ In either case it was a large rose. The Province or Damask Rose was probably the better known. Gerarde, in his Herbal, says that the damask rose is called by some ‘Rosa provincialis.’ Fairholt (Costume in England, p. 238) quotes from Friar Bacon’s Prophecy, 1604: ‘When roses in the gardens grew, And not in ribbons on a shoe: Now ribbon roses take such place, That garden roses want their grace.’ At p. 379 he gives several instances of the extravagances to which this fashion led. Tschischwitz wildly proposes and adopts ‘provisional’ for the following reason: ‘The passing strangeness of the assumption that actors procured fresh (?) roses from the town of Provins occurred neither to Douce nor to the critics who follow him. It is probable that nothing more than parti-colored paper was used as a substitute.’ Hence, ‘Since “Provincial” yields no meaning, it is clear that Sh. here wrote provincial (like the Italian provisionale), that is, a pair of makeshift-roses.’

265. razed] THEOBALD: I once suspected that we ought to read ‘raised shoes.’ It was the known custom of the tragedians of old, that they might nearer resemble the heroes they personated, to make themselves as tall in stature as they possibly could. But perhaps it may have been ‘raied shoes,’ that is, striped, spangled. STEEVENS: ‘Razed shoes’ may mean slashed shoes, i.e. with cuts or openings in them. Sh. might have written ‘raised shoes,’ i.e. shoes with high heels. Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses, 1595, has a chapter on corksed shoes, ‘which,’ he says, ‘bear them up two inches or more from the ground, &c., some of red, blacke, &c., razed, carued, cut, and stiched,’ &c. To raise and to raze alike signify to streak. See Markham’s Country Farm: ‘—baking them all (i.e. wafer cakes) together between two irons, having within them many raced and checkered draughts after the manner of small squares.' Hunter (ii, 254) cites from Peacham, The Truth of Our Times, 1638, to show that gallants sometimes paid thirty pounds for a pair of shoe-ties, called roses. Collier (ed. 2): The (MS) reads rais'd, which is possibly right. Burbage, being short, may have worn 'rais'd shoes,' but still it seems unlikely that he would thus be made to advert to his own deficiency. Stauton: If 'razed' be right, it must mean slashed or opened shoes. Clarendon: In Randle Holme's Academy of Armory, bk. iii, ch. i, p. 14, we find: 'Pinked or raised Shoos, have the over leathers grain part cut into Roses, or other devices.'
Hor. Half a share.

265. cry] Warburton: 'Allusion to a pack of hounds,' which, says Steevens, was formerly called a cry. Here it means a troop or company. See Cor. IV, vi, 168, and III, iii, 220. Clarendon: Compare Cotgrave: 'Meute: f. A kennell, or crie of hounds.'

267. share] Malone: The actors in Shakespeare's time had not annual salaries as at present. The whole receipts of each theatre were divided into shares, of which the proprietors of the theatre, or house-keepers, as they were called, had some: and each actor had one or more shares, or part of a share, according to his merit. See Var. 1821, iii, [p. 171. Also Collier's Annals of the Stage, iii, p. 429.] Clarendon: In Henslowe's Diary (p. 5) is a memorandum of £15 being lent to Francis Henslowe for a share with the Queen's players, and [p. 8, three years afterwards, in 1596] £9 for a half share with another company. [In Halliwell's very valuable Illustrations of the Life of Shakespeare, 1874, pp. 86-91, certain petitions and answers are reprinted, that were filed in 1635, in the Lord Chamberlain's office, and although in date they are after Shakespeare's day, they nevertheless throw great light on the early financial management of the Globe and Blackfriars theatres, and of the value of the shares in them. The substance of one of these petitions, which shows us what the house-keepers were, and that they and the actors were not always in accord, is as follows: 'Robert Benefield, Eyllard Swanston, and Thomas Pollard doe further humbly represent unto your Lordship. That the housekeepers beeing but six in number, viz., Mr. Cuthbert Burbadge, Mrs. Condall, Mr. Shankes, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Lowen and Mr. Robinson (in the right of his wife), have amongst them the full moyety of all the galleries and boxes in both houses, and of the tiring-house door at the Globe. That the actors have the other moyety, with the outer dores; but in regard the actors are halfe as many more, viz., nine in number, their shares fall shorter and are a great deale lesse then the housekeepers; and yet, notwithstanding out of those lesser shares the sayd actors defray all charges of the house whatsoever, viz., wages to hired men and boyes, musique, lightes, &c., amounting to 900 or 1000 li. per annum or thereabouts, beeing 3 li. a day one day with another; besides the extraordinary charge which the sayd actors are wholly at for apparell and poetes, &c. Whereas the sayd housekeepers out of all their gains have not till Lady Day last payd above 65 li. per annum rent for both houses, towards which they rayse betweene 20 and 30 li. per annum from the tap houses and a tenement and a garden belonging to the premisses, &c., and are at noe other charges whatsoever, excepting the ordinary reparations of the houses. Soe that upon a medium made of the gynes of the howeskeepers and those of the actors one day with another throughout the yeere, the petitioners will make it apparent that when some of the hous-kepers share 12s. a day at the Globe, the actors share not above 3s. And then what those gaine that are both actors and houskeepers, and have their shares in both, your Lordship will easily judge, and thereby finde the modesty of the petitioners suite, who desire onely to buy for their money one part a peecce from such three of the sayd houskeepers as are fittest to spare them, both in respect of desert and otherwise, viz., Mr. Shankes, one part of his three,' &c. Mr John Shankes not unnaturally remonstrated, and it is from his answer that we learn the value of a 'share,' not only of a 'houskeeper,' but in a 'cry of players;' he states that 'he did buy [of William Hemings] one part hee had in the Blackfriers for about six yeeres then to come at the yeeryer rent of 6 li. 5 s., and another part hee then had in the Globe for about two yeeres to come, and payd him for the same two partes in ready moneys 156 li.

... about eleven months since, the sayd William Hemings, offering to sell unto your suppliant the remaining partes hee then had, viz., one in the Blackfriers, wherein hee had then about five yeeres to come, and two in the Globe, wherein hee had then but one yeere to come, your suppliant likewise bought the same, and payd for them in ready moneys more 350 li., all which moneys so disbursed by your suppliant amount to 506 li.,' &c. Shankes, who had been one of Shakespeare's fellow-actors, makes an appeal ad misericordiam as 'beeing an old man in this quality, [see Ham. II, ii, 333 and 417], and then states that 'Mr. Swanston one of them who is most violent in this busines,' 'hath further had and receaved this last yeere above 34 li. for the profit of a third part of one part in the Blackfriers which hee bought for 20 li.' Nor did 'Cutbert Burbadge and Winifred his brothers wife, and William his sonne' submit any more quietly than John Shankes to be 'trampled upon,' as they term it, and their answer is a Shakespearian discovery so recent and so interesting not only in its familiar allusion to Shakespeare as a 'deserving man,' but also in its reference to the Children of the Queen's Chapel, that the following extract will not be deemed too long nor out of place: 'The father of us, Cutbert and Richard Burbadge, was the first builder of playhouses and was himselfe in his younger yeeres a player. 268. I] MALONE: It should be, I think,—'A whole one;—ay,—' [Most improperly—DYCE, Gloss.]. STEEVES: It means no more than, 'I think myself entitled to a whole one.' CALDECOTT: 'A whole one, say I.' STAUTON: Malone's emendation will strike many as the more likely reading. WHITE thinks it strange that modern editions should retain '1' of QQff. STRATMANN agrees with Malone.

269–271. DYCE: Another quotation, surely; 'pajock,' of course, excepted.
271. Jove] HUDSON: The meaning is, that Denmark was robbed of a king who had the majesty of Jove.

272. pajock] POPE: This alludes to the fable of the birds choosing a king; instead of the eagle, a peacock. THEOBALD (Sh. Restored, p. 94) proposed: First, meacock, a 'cravenly' bird, and metaphorically a dastardly effeminate fellow; Second, paddock, a toad; Third, gatock, a ravenous kite, a devourer of the state and people. Of these three Theobald repeated only the second in his edition, with the note: 'I think Ham, is setting his father's and uncle's characters in contrast to each other: and means to say, that by his father's death the state was stripped of a godlike monarch, and that now in his stead reigned the most despicable poisonous animal that could be: a mere paddock or toad.' This word I take to be of Hamlet's own substituting. The verses repeated, seem to be from some old ballad; in which, rhyme being necessary, I doubt not but the last verse ran thus: A very, very—ass. FARMER: A peacock seems proverbial for a fool. Thus, Gascoigne, in his Weeds: 'A theefe, a coward, and a peacocke foole.' MALONE: Sh. means that the King struts about with a false pomp, to which he has no right. See Florio, 1598: 'Fannonneggiare. To let vp and down fondly gazing vpon himselfe, as a peacocke doth.' MARTINUS SCRIBERUS (Explanations, &c., Edinburgh, 1814): The original word soundeth to me like a foreign word introduced into our language. Following out this hint, if thou wilt look, reader, into any Italian Dictionary, thou wilt see that the word baiocce means a piece of money, of about three farthings value, and there was a siluer coin of that value in Queen Elizabeth's time, which seemed to figure in Shakespeare's imagination as something abundantly ridiculous. See King John, I, i, 143. When Hamlet, therefore, calls the King a pajock, he merely means to use one of the most contemptuous expressions which occurred to him in the moment; so that I would not alter the text. Dyce: 'Pajock' is certainly equivalent to peacock. I have often heard the lower classes in the north of Scotland call the peacock—the 'pea-jock,' and their almost invariable name for the turkey-cock is 'bubfly-jock.' Halliwell quotes Dyce, and adds: there can be little doubt but that the word in the text is a similarly corrupted form. Elze: If paddock be inadmissible, pawcock may be suggested. See Hen. V: IV, i, 44; and Twelfth Night, III, iv, 125. Eden Warwick (N. & Qu., 7 Dec. '61), finding from Bunsen's Egypt's Place, &c. that the word Patacco, the name of the ancient Phoenician gods, still survives at the present day in Rome, applied to a coin with a hideous, worn-out impression, which is called a 'Patacco,' suggested that 'pajocke' is a misprint for patokie. Leo (N. & Qu., Jan. 21, '65): 'Hamlet means ars, and does not intend to weaken what he means by supplying it by such an innocent word as "peacock," "paddock," &c. He says, "A very, very . . .," and then he says nothing more, but hemi in a rather characteristic way; and so gives to the hearer the opportunity to supply by rhyme what he has left unsaid. And so I suppose the word in question did not belong to the verse, but was a stage-direction, which I should like to understand as—"hiccup," "A very, very . . . [hiccup]." [Can this be surpassed? Ed.] Latham (N. & Qu., 12 Aug. '71) suggests Polack. In Hamlet Danicisms may be expected, and this word, besides its primary, national meaning, had, owing to the ill feeling between the Poles and the Danes, a secondary meaning equivalent to blackguard or Philistine. T. McGrath (N. & Qu., 23 Sept. '71) suggests paj-ock, i.e. paj, equivalent to patch, a contemptuous fellow, and -ock, diminutive. Hence 'pajock' or patchock, a paltry clown; and cites Spenser, A View of the present State of Ireland, p. 636, Globe ed.:—
[272. 'pajock.']

'Some in Leinster . . . are degenerate, and grown to be as very patchockes as the wild Irish.' Keightley (Expositor, 293): I agree with Theobald, as the King is afterwards called a 'paddock,' and there is probably an allusion to the poisoning. Tschischwitz: The word is Polish, pajuk, pajok, and means a servant, a doorkeeper, like hajduk. I have not been able to discover at what period Haiducks were introduced into European courts, but it is quite possible that it took place towards the close of the sixteenth century. Anonymous (New Shakespearian Interpretations, Edin. Rev. Oct. 1872): All agree that the various spellings in the QF indicate one word: peacock; in discussing this passage critics have forgotten the character that the peacock held in the natural history, as well as in the popular belief, of the time. The most popular manual of natural history in Shakespeare's day gives the following account: 'And the peacock is a bird that loveth not his young, for the male searcheth out the female, and seeketh out her egges for to break them, that he may so occupy him the more in his lecherie. And the female dreadeth that, and hideth busily her egges, lest the pecocke might soone find them. And Aristotle sayth that the pecocce hath an unsteadfast and evill shapen head, as it were the head of a serpent, and with a crest. And he hath a simple pace, and a small necke, and areareed, and a blew breast, and a taiile ful of bewty, and he hath the foulest feet and rievede . . . and he hath an horrible voice. And as one sayeth, he hath a voice of a frend, the head of a serpent, and the pace of a theefe. And Plinius sayth that the pecocce hath envie to man's profit, and swalloweth his owne durt: for it is full medicinable, but it is seldom found.' This last is a curiously dark touch of malevolence. not have selected the name of bird or beast that expressed with greater emphasis the hateful union of corrupted passion and evil life that now usurped the throne and bed of Denmark. JOHN DAVIES (N. & Qu., 11 March, '76): This is probably the Low German (Friesic) pojke, or pojeck, a boy. In Sweden the modern form is pojke, but the provincial and older form is pojke = payck. In the north of England it is shortened into pack, and in Denmark into pog. In all these countries it is a term of reproach. A northern peasant woman in England will call her child a dirty or a naughty pack, especially when some offence against cleanliness has been committed. It is often pronounced broadly, paack, not unlike paioche. In the present passage it is equivalent to a mere dirty boy, probably with some reference to his sensual habits. [I think Dyce's testimony is conclusive. Ed.]

gleam of Hamlet's old regard for his schoolfellows shines out here for a moment; but it fades again instantly, and he ends with a jesting allusion to the catechism,—intended to avow, rather than to conceal, his feeling that he is using his tongue in a way forbidden, as much as picking and stealing are to his hands.

320. pickers and stealers] Johnson: Hands. Whalley: The phrase is taken from our church catechism, where the catechumen, in his duty to his neighbor, is taught to keep his hands from picking and stealing. Nares: Examples are common of swearing by the fingers, called in cant phrase, 'the ten bones.' See 2 Hen. VI: I, iii, 139. Caldecott: 'Pykare or lyttyle theepe.'—Prompt. Parv. Clarendon: 'By this hand!' is a frequent form of asseveration. See Temp. III, ii, 56, 78; Mer. of Ven. V, i, 161.

321. your cause] Clarendon: The cause of your disorder. So 'your sovereignty of reason,' in I, iv, 73.

327. proverb] Malone: The remainder of this old proverb is preserved in Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, 1578: 'Whilst grass doth growe, oft sterves the seely steede.' Again, in The Paradise of Daintie Devises, 1578: 'To whom of old this proverbe well it serves, While grass doth growe, the silly horse he sterves.' Ham. means to intimate that whilst he is waiting for the succession to the throne of Denmark, he may himself be taken off by death.

329. recorders] Dyce: The change from the plural of the Qq to the singular of the Ff I have not the slightest doubt we must attribute to the 'company,' who were obliged to be economical both of persons and properties. A single recorder, why do you go about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toil?

indeed, suffices for the mere business of this scene; but the alteration is quite at variance with what precedes in line 280.

329. recorders] Chappell (Popular Music of the ‘Olden Time,’ p. 246, and note): Old English musical instruments were commonly made of three or four different sizes, so that a player might take any of the four parts that were required to fill up the harmony. So Violins, Lutes, Recorders, Flutes, Shawms, &c., have been described by some writers in a manner which (to those unacquainted with this peculiarity) has appeared irreconcilable with other accounts. Sh. (in Hamlet) speaks of the Recorder as a little pipe, and says, in Mid. N. D., ‘he hath played on his prologue like a child on a recorder,’ but in an engraving of the instrument* it reaches from the lip to the knee of the performer; and among those left by Henry VIII were Recorders of box, oak, and ivory, great and small, two base Recorders of walnut, and one great base Recorder. Recorders and (English) Flutes are to outward appearance the same, although Lord Bacon in his Natural History, cent. iii, sec. 221, says the Recorder hath a less bore, and a greater above and below. The number of holes for the fingers is the same, and the scale, the compass, and the manner of playing, the same. Salter describes the recorder, from which the instrument derives its name, as situate in the upper part of it, i.e. between the hole below the mouth and the highest hole for the finger. He says, ‘Of the kinds of music, vocal has always had the preference in esteem, and in consequence the Recorder, as approaching nearest to the sweet deliciousness of the voice, ought to have first place in opinion, as we see by the universal use of it confirmed.’ Ward, the military instrument-maker, informs me that he has seen ‘old English flutes’ with a hole bored through the side, in the upper part of the instrument, covered with a thin piece of skin, like gold-beater’s skin. I suppose this would give somewhat the effect of the quill or reed in the Hautboy, and that these were Recorders. Recorders were used for teaching birds to pipe.

329. To withdraw with you] Capell (Notes, i, 138): That is, to have done with you, draw towards an end with you; and he singles out Guil., as of a darker and more treacherous temper than the other. [Capell marks the phrase as an Aside.] M. Mason: These words were probably spoken to the Players, whom Ham. wished to get rid of. Read, therefore, ‘So, withdraw you;’ or ‘So withdraw, will you?’ Steevens: Here Malone added the stage-direction: [Taking Guildenstern aside.] But the foregoing obscure words may refer to some gesture which Guil. had used, and which at first was interpreted by Ham. into a signal for him to attend the speaker into another room. ‘To withdraw with you?’ (says he). ‘Is that your meaning?’ But finding his friends continue to move mysteriously about him, he adds, with some resentment, a question more easily intelligible. Caldecott: The two royal emissaries at first only request that the Prince would ’vouchsafe them a word; ‘ and they then acquaint him with the King’s rage, and the Queen’s command to visit her. They then, by a waving of the hand, or some such signal, as the exclamation of Ham. denotes, intimate that he should remove to a more retired quarter. Although aware that the above, their only proper business, could not require any private communication, he at first, in gentle expostulation, reproaches them; but presently recollecting their insidious aims, and feeling at the same time, as an indignity, the freedom taken in thus beckoning him to withdraw, he in a moment assumes a different tone; and, with the most galling sneer and interrogatory, heaps upon them the utmost contemp and contumely. Singer: It means no more than 'to draw back with you,' to leave that scent or trail. It is a hunting term, like that which follows. Staunton: It is simply a direction addressed to the Players who bring in the recorders, and the true reading: 'So—[taking a recorder] withdraw with you.' What subsequently transpires between Ham. and his schoolfellows could hardly have taken place in presence of the Players, and the disputed words may have been intended to mark the departure of the latter. Cambridge Editors: If the reading and punctuation given in our text be right, the words seem to be addressed to Guil. Clarendon: For this use of the infinitive, compare III, iv, 216; and King John, I, i, 256. Moberly: Just step aside for a moment. Tschischwitz: Perhaps we should read, 'Go, withdraw with you.'

330. wind] Singer: This phrase is borrowed from hunting, and means to get the animal pursued to run with the wind, that it may not scent the toil or its pursuers. 'Observe how the wind is, that you may set the net so as the hare and wind may come together; if the wind be sideways it may do well enough, but never if it blow over the net into the hare's face, for he will scent both it and you at a distance.'—Gentleman's Recreation. Moberly: As if you were stalking a deer.

333. unmannerly] Warburton: If my duty to the king makes me press you a little, my love to you makes me still more importunate. If that makes me bold, this makes me even unmannerly. Heath (p. 540): If you think me too bold in what I have said by the command of your mother, to offer anything on the single motive of my love to your person would be unmannerly. Tyrwhitt: Read—my love is not unmannerly. My conception of the passage is, that, in consequence of Hamlet's moving to take the recorder, Guil. also shifts his ground, in order to place himself beneath the prince in his new position. This, Ham. ludicrously calls 'going about to recover the wind,' &c., and Guil. may answer properly enough, and like a courtier; if my duty to the king makes me too bold in pressing you, upon a disagreeable subject, my love to you will make me not unmannerly, in showing you all possible marks of respect and attention. Caldecott: If my sense of duty have led me too far, it is affection and regard for you that makes the carriage of that duty border on disrespect. See 'Forgive me this my virtue,' III, iv, 152. Singer: Ham. may say with propriety, 'I do not well understand that.' Keightley: 'I read, "If my duty be too bold, my love [is] too unmannerly..."' Clarendon: Probably Sh. intended Guildenstern's words to express an unmeaning compliment. As Ham. did not well understand them, commentators may be excused at attempting to explain them.

NICHOLSON: Hitherto Ros. and Guild. have so uniformly worked in common that the artistic management of the scene, as well as the fuller force thereby gained, demands that Hamlet's request be addressed first to one and then to the other. Nor, though Guil. may or may not be the leader of the two, is Ros. silent; in fact, in the previous dialogue, Ros. is the one who is set before us as trying to get the wind of Ham. In this reply, therefore, let 'Guil.' be changed to Ros. [Probably these same reasons influenced the following emendation of Staunton, line 339. Ed.]

342. thumb] STEEVENS attempts to justify the misprint of Q, Qs by supposing that the umber was 'the ancient name for that piece of movable brass at the end of a flute which is either raised or depressed by the finger.' In support, he adduces instances of the use of the words umber, and umbriere, which, however, mean the visor of a helmet. TOLLET supports the reading on practical grounds: if a recorder had a brass key like the German flute, we are to follow Q, Qs; for then the thumb could not govern the ventages; if, however, it had not a brass key, then the reading of the Ff must stand. NASES, in refutation, says that the brass key is more modern than the time of Sh.
343. eloquent] CORSON: I feel a certain seriousness—that's hardly the word—about 'eloquent,' not in keeping; whereas, in the use of excellent there seems to be implied the idea that the music that can be got out of the little instrument is superior to what one would suspect. The word 'excellent' should be pronounced with a downward circumflex on 'ex,' imparting a patronizing tone.
344. stops] MALONE: The sounds formed by stopping the holes. See line 17 of Induction to 2 Hen. IV. SINGER: Rather the mode of stopping those ventages to produce notes.
Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill.

Ham. Why, look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass; and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 352. speak] KNIGHT (ed. i): Sh. certainly meant to say [in Ff], yet cannot you make this music, this excellent voice. Guil. could have made the pipe speak, but he could not command it to any utterance of harmony. Even in the Qq it should be printed 'yet cannot you make it. Speak! 'Sblood,' &c. [This last conj. is withdrawn in ed. ii, and instead is the sentence: 'We now prefer to consider the Folio erroneous.'] DYCE: When 'Sblood' was struck out [of Ff], to be replaced by Why, the preceding word, 'speak,' was at the same time accidentally struck out, 'Speak' answers to 'discourse,' line 243.—Remarks, &c., p. 217.

355. fret] DOUCE (ii, 250): Here is a play on words and a double meaning. Ham. says, 'though you can vex me, you cannot impose on me; though you can stop the instrument, you cannot play on it.' DYCE (Gloss.): Frets are stops of instruments of the lute or guitar kind, 'small lengths of wire on which the fingers press the strings in playing the Guitar.'—Busby's Dict. of Musical Terms, ed. iii.

363. backed . . . weasel] Theobald preferred ouzle to 'weasel,' because, first, a 'weasel' is not black (to read 'back'd' only avoids the absurdity of giving a false color to the 'weasel'); secondly, by reading 'ouzle,' there is humor in comparing the same elound to a Beast, a Bird, and a Fish. HEATH: The resemblance of a cloud to an animal is generally concluded from its shape, not its color. 'Weasel,' then, is the true reading, and Polonius, in his eagerness to humor a madman, unluckily pitches upon the very portion of a weasel in which it most differs from a camel. STEEVENS: Tollet observes that we might read, 'it is back'd like a weasel,' i.e. weasel-snouted. So, in Hollinshed's Description of England, p. 172: 'if he be weasel-backed.' Quarles uses this term of reproach in his Virgin Widow: 'Go you weasel-snouted, adile-pated,' &c. Tollet adds, that Milton in his Lycidas calls a promontory beaked, i.e. prominent like the beak of a bird or a ship.

374. bitter business] Warburton: This expression is almost burlesque. The Quarto is much nearer Shakespeare's words, who wrote 'bitter day,' which gives the sentiment great force and dignity. 'The horror of the season suits me for a deed which the pure and sacred day would quake to look on.' This is said with great classical propriety. According to ancient superstition, night was prophane and execrable, and day pure and holy. Heath: Warburton objects that the phrase is almost burlesque. It is so; but it is so only from the abuse of the word 'bitter,' which is crept into our language from amongst the vulgar, long since the days of Sh., and which can have no weight in the present case. If alteration be necessary, I should suppose Sh. wrote 'the bitterest day.' Steevens: Though at present this is a vulgar phrase, yet it might not have been such in Shakespeare's time. Dyce, in his Few Notes, &c., p. 141, not knowing that he had been anticipated by Warburton, proposed 'better day.' And although in both of his eds. he preferred the reading of the F, he would not allow that 'better' was indefensible, but cites in his ed. ii the following note by Mitford: 'The word is better. The 'bitter day' is opposed to the 'watching time of night.' It is the lex καιρος of Homer, I. 8. 66.'—Gent. Mag. Feb. 1845, p. 125. 'I may add, too,' continues Dyce, 'that John Kemble,—whose performance of the Prince of Denmark is among the most vivid recollections of my youth,—invariably [said "bitter day."] See Hamlet, revised by J. P. Kemble, 1814, p. 51.' Cartwright (New Readings, &c., p. 37): Read, 'And do such business as the light of day.'

375. Coleridge: The utmost at which Ham. arrives, is a disposition, a mood, to do something;—but what to do is left undecided, while every word he utters tends to betray his disguise. Yet observe how perfectly equal to any call of the moment is Ham., let it only not be for the future.

379. use none] Hunter (ii, 254): To be sure not; and strange it is that the Poet should have thought it necessary to put such a remark into the mouth of Ham. That the thought should arise detracts from our admiration of his character, as much as it precludes approbation or silent admission of the moral taste discovered in this play by its author. It is, besides, dramatically improper; for, in the first place, his mother had done nothing to deserve it; it is not even insinuated against her that she was acquainted with the manner of her former husband's death. Her offence was marrying again too soon, and, in addition to this, that her second husband was brother to the first. In the next place, such a deed would not only delay the execution of the high behest of the Ghost, which is the main purpose of the drama, but would in all probability have entirely frustrated it; and Ham. cannot be supposed not to have foreseen that such would be the result. Ham. a matricide would have become instantly an object of universal odium. In fact, the truth cannot and ought not to be concealed that, popular as this play is, not in England only, but all the world over, there are parts in it which seem quite at variance with the ordinary modes of thinking of its author.

381. shent] Steevens: To shend, is to reprove harshly, to treat with rough language. Henderson: 'Shent' means more than reproof. Ham. surely means 'however my mother may be hurt, wounded, or punished.'

382. consent] Corson (p. 28): 'Consent' is not an imperative, but a subjunctive, and 'soul' a nominative, not a vocative. See Abbott, §§ 364, 365.

3. commission] Moberly: Ros. and Guil. are therefore privy to the traitorous scheme for killing Ham. in England.

4. along] For instances of the omission of the verb of motion after 'along;' see Abbott, § 30, where it is stated that 'Let's along' is still a common Americanism.' 6. near us] WHITE: Considering the expression of 'personal fear' in the first line of the King's speech, the Qq may contain the true reading, of which that of the Ff is a corruption.

7. lunacies] THROBOLD: This unnecessary Alexandrine we owe to the players. Sh. wrote 'lunes', i.e. madness, frenzy. See Wint. Tale, II, ii, 30; Merry Wives, IV, ii, 22. JOHNSON: I take 'browes' of the Qq to be, properly read, 'frowes', which, I think, is a provincial word for 'perverse humours', which being not understood was changed to 'lunacies.' But of this I am not confident. STEEVENS suggested that perhaps Sh. designed a metaphor from horned cattle, whose powers of being dangerous increase with the growth of their browes! HENLEY improved on this, and maintained that the image under which the King apprehends danger from Ham. is that of a bull! 'which, in his frenzy, might not only gore, but push him from his throne.'
ELZE: It is not improbable that Sh. wrote either 'frowes or braines.'

9. many many] COLLIER (ed. ii): The (MS) has 'very many,' thus setting right a manifest misprint of the Ff. [Adopted in the text by Collier (ed. ii) and Elze.]
STAUNTON: This expression, signifying numberless, should certainly be hyphenated, like too-too, few-few, most-most, &c.

13. noyance] CLARENDON: Harm. Here used in a stronger sense than our modern annoyance. Spenser, however, Fairy Queen, I, i, 23, has it, with the weaker meaning, applied to the 'feeble stinges' of 'gnattes.'

The lives of many. The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but like a gulf doth draw What's near it with it; it is a massy wheel,
Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things
Are mortised and adjoin'd; which, when it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence, Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone
Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.

King: Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage;
For we will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too free-footed.

15. cease] CALDECOTT: The demise. Throughout Sh. a strong sense is attached to this verb 'cease.' HUDSON: 'Cease' and 'Dies' are tautological in word, not in sense. The death of Majesty comes not alone. BAILEY (ii, 10): 'Cease' as a noun is not found elsewhere; here it means death, so that the speaker is made to assert that death dies not alone, and that it is a massy wheel as well as like a gulf; whereas Sh. evidently meant to predicate these things of majesty itself. Read, therefore, 'Decaying majesty,' &c. CLARENDON: Here used for the king dying, as 'life' in line 11 is used for the living man.

18. mount] MOBERLY: At the top of the bank, at the edge of a mine.

21. annexment] CLARENDON: This is not found elsewhere.

26. We] ELZE: This speech is given erroneously to both Ros. and Guil. The former is on all occasions the spokesman, while the latter appears to be more a subordinate attendant,—the only time that he ventures on an independent speech is III, ii, 284, et seq., and then he begs express permission to speak. See III, ii, 46 [Qq], and IV, iii, 16, where Ros. treats him like a messenger.
ACT III, SC. iii.] HAMLET

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My lord, he’s going to his mother’s closet;
Behind the arras I'll convey myself,
To hear the process; I'll warrant she'll tax him home;
And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meet that some more audience than a mother,
Since nature makes them partial, should o'erhear
The speech, of vantage. Fare you well, my liege;
I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord. [Exit Polonius.

27. Polonius] COLERIDGE: Polonius’s volunteer obtrusion of himself into this business, while it is appropriate to his character, still itching after former importance, removes all likelihood that Ham. should suspect his presence, and prevents us from making his death injure Ham. in our opinion.
30. as you said] MOBERLY: This was Polonius’s own suggestion, which, courtier-like, he ascribes to the King.

33. of vantage] WARBURTON: By some opportunity of secret observation. ABBOTT, § 165; ‘Of’ here retains its original meaning of from; hence the words are equivalent to from the vantage-ground of concealment.
38. murder] THEOBALD: Was a brother’s murder the eldest curse? Surely, it was rather the crime that was the cause of this eldest curse. I have ventured at two supplemental syllables, as innocent in themselves, as necessary to the purposes for which they are introduced: ‘That of a brother’s murder.’ HEATH (p. 541): The defect in the measure is sufficiently accounted for by the break which divides the verse: ‘A brother’s murder’ is in apposition, not to the curse, but to the offence. WALKER (Crit. ii, 199): ‘Read, for metre-sake, murderer.’
39. as will] THEOBALD: An ingenious gentleman started, at a heat, this very probable emendation: ‘as ’twill.’ Will signifying barely the determination of mind
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother’s blood,
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Where to serves mercy
But to confront the visage of offence?
And what’s in prayer but this twofold force,
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon’d being down? Then I’ll look up;
My fault is past. But oh, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? ‘Forgive me my foul murder?’
That cannot be, since I am still possess’d
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition and my queen.

56. offence] Warburton: Sh. here repeated a word which he employed two lines above, 'th' effects,' i.e. of his murder. Johnson: He that does not amend what can be amended retains his offence. The King kept the crown from the right heir. Clarendon: See 'theft,' III, ii, 84.

57. corrupted 'currents] Walker (Crit. iii, 267): Write 'currents,' as in 1 Hen. IV: II, iii, 58. (Note, too, occurrences, Hen. V: V, Prologue, line 40.) Lettsom (Footnote to the above): In Beau. & Fl., Beggar's Bush, I, i, 8: 'So much to all the occurrences of my country,' we have the word at full length. So, in Hamlet, V, ii, 344. [Unless we adopt this excellent emendation of Walker's, we are forced to the conclusion of Clarendon's, that these lines, 57 and 58, 'offer an example of that confusion of metaphor so frequent in Sh. Compare III, i, 59.' This 'confusion of metaphor' is certainly 'frequent' enough, but I can see no need of retaining as an instance of it a passage that can be cleared up by an apostrophe. The word is given in full, occurrences, in Miscellaneous Obs. on Hamlet, 1752, p. 37. Ed.]

58. above by] Tschischwitz calls attention to this adverbial use of 'by,' and Dyce prints 'show by.' [Consistency would print, 'To give-in evidence,' line 64. Ed.]

59. prize] Collier (ed. 2): There cannot be a doubt of the propriety of an emendation [purse of the (MS)] of an error, which perhaps arose from the use of short-hand in transcribing the words; purse and 'prize' being spelt with the same letters. Dyce (Strictures, &c., p. 189): The 'prize' is equivalent to 'the thing acquired by wicked means,' i.e. the crown.

62. we . . . evidence] Wordsworth (Shakespeare's Knowledge of the Bible, p. 301): It is not a little remarkable that Sh. should have seized upon this point. He is supported by Bishop Pearson (obit. 1686), that great divine, who says: 'this conscience is not so much a judge as a witness bound over to give testimony, for or against us, at some judgement after this life.'

62. ourselves compelled] Tschischwitz: For another instance of the omission
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it when one can not repent?
O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
O limed soul, that struggling to be free
Art more engaged! Help, angels! make assay!
Bow, stubborn knees, and, heart with strings of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!

66. can not] Warburton: This nonsense even exceeds the last. Sh. wrote, 'when one can but repent,' i.e. what can repentance do without restitution? Johnson: What can repentance do for a man that cannot be penitent, for a man who has only part of penitence, distress of conscience, without the other part, resolution of amendment? Walker (Vers. 159): Write cannot, with the accent on the last syllable.

69. assay] See Brake's forcible explanation of this word, III, i, 59, p. 208.
72. well] Coleridge: This speech well marks the difference between crime and guilt of habit. The conscience here is still admitted to audience. Nay, even as an audible soliloquy, it is far less improbable than is supposed by such as have watched men only in the beaten road of their feelings. But the final, 'All may be well!' is remarkable; the degree of merit attributed by the self-flattering soul to its own struggle, though baffled, and to the indefinite half-promise, half-command, to persevere in religious duties. The solution is in the divine medium of the Christian doctrine of expiation; not what you have done, but what you are, must determine.

Ham. came in at the back, the King was kneeling in front of the stage, and did not retire and kneel, as stated in modern eds.

73. Ham. (Some Remarks, &c., 1736, p. 41): This speech of Hamlet's has always given me great offense. There is something so very bloody in it, so inhuman, so unworthy of a hero, that I wish our poet had omitted it.

74. Coleridge: Dr Johnson's mistaking [see note, line 95] of the marks of reluctance and procrastination for impetuous, horror-striking fiendishness!—of such importance is it to understand the germ of a character. But the interval taken by Hamlet's speech is truly awful!

75. Hazlitt (p. 107): This refinement of malice here expressed by Ham. is in truth only an excuse for his own want of resolution.

76. Hunter (ii, 255): In the whole range of the drama there is, perhaps, nothing more offensive than this scene. Ham. is made to doat on an idea which is positively shocking. Besides, as an excuse for not then executing the command, under the spell of which he lived, it is poor and trivial.

77. Morely: Ham. had before said (I, ii, 182): 'Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven,' &c. This notion of killing soul and body must therefore be the natural impulse of his mind. It seems simpler to admit this view of Hamlet's speech here than to consider it, as Coleridge does, to be at least half an excuse for not doing now the act of vengeance from which his soul shrinks, though an unyielding law has imposed it on him.

78. Horn (ii, 56): Now comes the moment for revenge, but only for revenge, not for righteous punishment, which must be preceded by a full, perhaps also by a public, conviction.

79. would] For instances of 'would' requires to, see Macb. I, v, 19; I, vii, 34; and Abbott, § 329.

80. sole] Warburton: The Fi lead us to the true reading, which is 'foul son,' i.e. disinherned. This was an aggravation of the injury; that he had not only murdered the father, but ruined the son.

81. Heath: If any alteration be needed the Fi would rather direct us to substitute 'fool son.' Capell (vol. i, Various Readings, p. 26) also conjectures 'fool.' Johnson: 'I his only son, who am bound to punish his murderer.' Caldecott: Foule (most probably a misprint) may be offending, degenerate. Collier (ed. 2): A blunder, of course, from the long having been mistaken, and from the misspelling of 'sole,' foule.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush as May;
And how his audit stands who knows save heaven?
But in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him; and am I then revenged,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No,
Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid hent;

79. hire and salary] CALDECOTT: A thing, for which from him I might claim a recompense.

80. bread] MALONE: 'Behold this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread and abundance of idleness,' &c.—Ezecliel, xvi, 49.

81. flush blown] CLARENDON: Compare what the Ghost says of himself, I, v, 76, &c.

82. audit] WARBURTON: From these lines, and some others, it appears that Sh. had drawn the first sketch of this play without his Ghost; and, when he added that machinery, he forgot to strike out these lines. For the Ghost had told him very circumstantially how his audit stood; and he was now satisfied with the reality of the vision. RITSON: As it appears from the Ghost's own relation that he was in purgatory, Hamlet's doubt could only be how long he was to continue there.

83. our . . . thought] Both CALDECOTT and DELIUS connect 'our' with 'circumstance,' the former paraphrasing: 'the measure or estimate of what may have reached us,' the latter, 'according to human relations and thoughts.' CLARENDON, on the other hand, connects 'our' with 'thoughts,' and paraphrases: 'the circumstance and course of our thought,' adding, 'We have a similar use of the possessive pronoun, I, iv, 73; III, ii, 321.' In Two Gent. I, i, 36, and Tro. & Crc. III, iii, 114, 'circumstance' means the details of an argument. So here 'circumstance of thought' means the details over which thought ranges, and from which its conclusions are formed.

85. To take] For instances of the infinitive indefinitely used, see ABBOTT, §§ 356, 357, and Macb. IV, ii, 69. CLARENDON: In taking him.

88. bent] THEOBALD (Nichols's Illustr. ii, 572): We must either restore bent or hint. [Not repeated in his ed.] WARBURTON (Nichols's Illustr. ii, 648): The true word is plainly hent, command. [Not repeated in his ed.] As these conjectures are found in the private correspondence between Warburton and Theobald, CAPELL cannot be accused of plagiarism for having adopted 'hine in his text. JOHNSON: To 'hent' is used by Sh. for to seize, to catch, to lay hold on. 'Hent' is therefore hold, or seizure. 'Lay hold on him, sword, at a more horrid time.' CALDECOTT: 'Have a more fierce, rash, or headlong grasp or purpose.' 'Hyntyn or hentyn, rapio, STAUNTON: 'Feel or be conscious of a more terrible purpose.' DYCE (Gloss.): A hold, an opportunity to be seized. CLARENDON: Equivalent to grip. Hamlet, as he leaves hold of his sword, bids it wait for a more terrible occasion to be grasped again. MONKELY: A more fell grasp on the villain. JOHN DAVIES (N. & Qu., 11 March, 1876): More probably here used in a sense common in some of the western counties, meaning the course or passage of the ploughshare up the furrow.

This is the W. hynt, O. W. hent (Zeuss, 100, 101), a way, a course; compare Lat.
sent-is, Gothic sintis. Hamlet's words would convey to the mind of a West-countryman a very forcible image; the sword, in its shearing through the flesh, being compared to the passage of a ploughshare through the earth.

94, 95. JOHNSON: This speech, in which Ham., represented as a virtuous character, is not content with taking blood for blood, but contrives damnation for the man that he would punish, is too horrible to be read or to be uttered. M. MASON:
Yet some moral may be extracted from it, as all his subsequent calamities were owing to this savage refinement of revenge. [STEVENS cites from Webster's White Devil, 1612; The Honest Lawyer, 1616; the third of Beau. & Fl.'s Four Plays in One, to show that the same fiend-like disposition is displayed by the various characters there portrayed. MALONE, to the same end, cites Machin's The Dumb Knight, 1633. As this does not illustrate Sh., but his successors, I have not repeated the half page from the Var. 1821, Ed.] REED: I think it not improbable, that when Sh. put this horrid sentiment into the mouth of Ham., he might have recollected the following story: 'One of these monsters meeting his enemy unarmed, threatened to kill him, if he denied not God, his power, and essential properties, viz. his mercy, suftenance, &c., the which when the other, desiring life, pronounced with great horror, kneeling upon his knees; the brave cried out, nowe will I kill thy body and soul, and at that instant thrust him through with his rapier.'

age in which he lived. The true question is not whether this practice were founded in religion, but whether or not Sh. gave a faithful picture of human nature in a barbarous age. With our ruder Northern ancestors, revenge, in general, was handed down in families as a duty, and the more refined and exquisite, the more honorable it was; and this character or feature of it is to be found in every book that in those times applies to the subject. And it was a subject brought upon the stage by subsequent tragedians as late as the middle of the seventeenth century. Sh. has here in some sort laid a ground for the introduction of it by making the King himself proclaim (IV, vii, 129); 'Revenge should have no bounds,' and he makes even the philosophizing and moralizing Squire of Kent, in his beloved retirement from the turmoils of the world, exclaim on killing Cade, 2 Hen. VI: And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.' Wordsworth (Shakespeare's Knowledge of the Bible, p. 208) finds for Ham. the same palliation as does Caldecott.

96. physic] Delius: Hamlet calls his temporary forbearance a physic which does not impart life to his foe, but prolongs his illness.

96. Hudson: Hamlet here flies off to an ideal revenge, in order to quiet his filial feelings without violating his conscience; effecting a compromise between them, by adjourning a purpose which, as a man, he dare not execute, nor, as a son, abandon.
He afterwards asks Horatio:— 'Is't not a perfect conscience, to quit him with this arm?' which confirms the view here taken, as it shows that even then his mind was not at rest on that score.

97, 98. Coleridge: Oh what a lesson concerning the essential difference between wishing and willing, and the folly of all motive-mongering, while the individual self remains!

Johnson: The advocates of 'sconce forget that the contrivance of Pol. to overhear the conference was no more told to the Queen than to Ham. 'I'll silence,' &c., is 'I'll use no more words.' Hunter (ii, 256): When Q, was altered, the text stood: 'I'll ensconce me here,' in printing en fell out, and was replaced wrongly; sconce, which remained, was then altered to 'silence.' Delius: As elsewhere, Polonius here thinks that he cannot be silent without letting it be known that he could and should say much more. Dyce: 'Silence' may be right; but Hanmer's alteration cannot be called an improbable one, in view of the corresponding words of Q*. White: Hanmer's change is very plausible. Staunton: Perhaps Hanmer is right. Cambridge Editors: We have adopted Hanmer's correction because of the corresponding passage in Q*.

You are the queen, your husband's brother's wife;

raire Secrète, Jan. 11, 1776, 'Chevalier Rutilge' defends this exclamation from Voltaire's sneer on the ground that 'a rat' was not only symbolic, but also that it often meant a spy. Compare the phrase, 'smell a rat.'

30. kill a king?] See Appendix, The Hystorie of Hamlet, p. 94 and p. 100, in reference to the Queen's innocence; also Q', line 1532.

38. proof and bulwark] CLARENDON: 'Proof,' used here adjectively, is originally a substantive, as in Mach. I, ii, 54, and elsewhere, and thus suggests 'bulwark,' which would scarcely have been used for an adjective had it stood alone.

38. sense] CALDECOTT: Feeling;
Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue
In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,
Calls virtue hypocrite, takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blister there; makes marriage vows

As from the body of contraction plucks.

42. rose] It is only by keeping steadfastly in mind the many benefits which we have received at the hands of the early commentators that we can listen with any patience to their dispute about the meaning of this phrase. Warburton thinks it refers to an actual flower worn on the side of the face. Steevens accepts the flower but denies the 'side of the face,' because the text read 'forehead;' it cannot mean a blush, 'because the forehead is no proper place for a blush to be displayed in.' It must be a rose on the forehead, and in proof of a figure, in a painted glass window representing a Morrice-Dance, is cited that bears a flower on the forehead! (I hope here be truths!) It makes very little matter that this flower turns out to be a Deptford Pink; the flower is there, and the rose in Hamlet follows as of course. Malone is rather overpowered by this display of learning, but ventures to suggest that rose might 'only mean the roseate hue.' And then, as if frightened at his own boldness, hastens to add that 'the forehead certainly appears to us an odd place for the hue of innocence to dwell on;' and yet Sh. has represented a smile there, as in Tro. & Cress. II, ii, 205, and moreover, 'that part of the forehead which is situated between the eyebrows seems to have been considered by our poet as the seat of innocence and modesty,' as in IV, v, 119. Boswell closes the discussion forever by saying that '"rose" is put generally for the ornament, the grace, of an innocent love.' Caldecott refers to the proverb frequent in Sh., and found in The London Prodigal, 1605: 'As true as the skin between any man's brows.' And, lastly, Singer refers to Ophelia's description of Ham. as 'the rose of the fair state.'

46. contraction] Warburton: For 'marriage contract.' Caldecott: Annihilates the very principle of contracts. White: There seems to be no better explanation than Warburton's. But I suspect that there is corruption. Tschischwitz: Probably a misprint for contractation, formed by analogy with the Ital. contrattazione. (This conjectural emendation (which Strattmann terms judicious, and compares with affectation of the Ff for 'affection' of the Qq in II, ii, 422) Tschischwitz inserts in the text, and instructs us to read 'body of' as a trochee. Ed.] Hudson: 'Contraction' here means the marriage contract; of which Hamlet holds religion to be the life and soul, insomuch that without this it is but as a lifeless body,
The very soul, and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words; heaven's face doth glow;
Yea, this solidity and compound mass,
With tristful visage, as against the doom,
Is thought-sick at the act.

Queen. Ay me, what act,
That roars so loud and thunders in the index?

and must soon become a nuisance. Rather superstitious, perhaps; but it should be considered that this play was written nearly three hundred years ago, when marriage was more a 'despotism' than it is now. CLARENDON: The word has probably never been used, before or since, in the same sense.

48. rhapsody CLARENDON: The meaning of the word here is well illustrated by the following passage from Florio's Montaigne, p. 68, ed. 1603: 'This concerneth not those mingle-mangles of many kinds of stuff, or, as the Grecians call them, Rapsodies.'

49. solidity...mass] KNIGHT: The earth.

50. as against] WARBURTON reads 'and as 'gainst,' which he says makes 'a fine sense' in comparison with the 'sad stuff' of the original. [See I, i, 158.]

50. doom] That is, doomsday. See Macb. II, iii, 74. MOBERLY: Heaven blushes at you, and the solid mass of earth is sick to think of it, as if it were waiting for the day of judgement. MALONE asks: Had not Sh. St Luke's (xxi, 25, 26) description of the last day in his thoughts? WORDSWORTH (Shakespeare's Knowledge of the Bible, p. 305) replies: 'No doubt he had; but why not also the parallel descriptions of Matthew and of Mark?' Yes, and still more, of Peter, 2 Ep. iii, 7-11; and John, Rev. xx, 11. The truth is, I fear, that whatever else our poet's critics have been strong in, they have, for the most part, not been strong in knowledge of the Scriptures; and that the book which they should have looked to first and most for help in the illustration of his works is the book which has been generally looked to last and least.'

51. Is thought-sick] TSCHISCHWITZ omits the hyphen, and affirms 'Is' to be the 'historical Present,' that is, 'Is thought [to be] sick.'

52. and...index] WARBURTON [following the distribution of speeches in Qq]: To the Queen's question, 'what act?' Ham. replies: 'That roars so loud if thunders to the Indies.' He had before said, Heav'n was shocked at it; he now tells her it resounded all the world over. This gives us a very good sense where all sense was wanting. EDWARDS (Canons, &c., p. 156, 7th ed.): Sh. uses 'index' for title, or prologue. The Index used formerly to be placed at the beginning of a book, not at the end, as now. Thus, also, in Rich. III: II, ii, 149; and Oth. II, i, 263.
Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on this, The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.

Malone: Bullokar's Expositor defines an 'Index' by 'A Table in a booke.' The table was almost always prefixed to books. Index, in the modern sense, were very uncommon. Dyce (Gloss.): Index, a prelude, anything preparatory to another. Tschischwitz: The explanations of 'in the index' are very lame. Instead of 'in,' we should manifestly read 'is,' and the sense is, 'What act, that roars so loud and thunders, is my accuser?' 'index' being understood in its ancient judicial sense.

53. picture Davies (Dram. Misc., Dublin, 1784, vol. iii, p. 63): It has been the constant practice of the stage, since the Restoration, for Ham. to produce from his pocket two pictures in little of his father and uncle, not much bigger than large coins or medallions. Instead of movable scenery, which was first introduced from France by Betterton in 1662, Shakespeare's stage made use of tapestry. Two full-length portraits in the tapestry of the Queen's closet might be of service in this scene. Steevens: It is evident from the words, 'A station,' &c., that these pictures, which are introduced as miniatures on the stage, were meant for whole lengths, being part of the furniture of the Queen's closet. Ham., who in a former scene had censured those who gave 'forty, fifty ducats apiece' for his uncle's 'picture in little,' would hardly have condescended to carry such a thing in his pocket. Malone: The introduction of miniatures in this place appears to be a modern innovation. A print prefixed to Rowe's edition of Hamlet, 1709, proves this. There the two royal portraits are exhibited as half-lengths, hanging in the Queen's closet; and either thus, or as whole-lengths, they were probably exhibited from the time of the original performance to the death of Betterton. To half-lengths, however, the same objection lies as to miniatures. Steevens: We may also learn that from this print the trick of kicking the chair down on the appearance of the Ghost was adopted by modern Hamlets from the practice of their predecessors. Caldecott objects to miniatures, because the audience could not then be permitted to judge of what they hear, nor make any estimate of the comparative excellence of the features, nor could the 'station' and the 'combination and the form' be adequately represented in so confined a space. Completely to do away with the objection that it is not probable that Ham. should have about him his uncle's picture, a Bath actor once suggested the snatching of it from his mother's neck. Hunter (ii, 256): Perhaps Holman's way was the best. The picture of the then King hung up in the lady's closet, but the miniature of the king who was dead was produced by Ham. from his bosom. [Fitzgerald (Life of Garrick, ii, 65) suggests that the pictures be seen with the mind's eye only; a suggestion adopted by Irving and Salvini. Fechter follows the suggestion of the Bath actor mentioned by Caldecott, and tears the miniature from his mother's neck and casts it away. Rosci not only tears it from his mother's neck, but dashes it to the ground and stamps on the fragments. Edwin Booth makes use of two miniatures, taking one from his own neck, and the other from his mother's.—A. J. Fish.]

54. counterfeit presentment Caldecott: The picture, or mimic representation. See Mer. of Ven. III, ii, 116. Clarendon: 'Counterfeit,' of course, is here used as an adjective. It is given by Cograve as an equivalent to the French pourtrait.
See what a grace was seated on this brow;
Hyperion’s curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station, like the herald Mercury
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination and a form indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal
To give the world assurance of a man;
This was your husband. Look you now, what follows;
Here is your husband; like a mildew’d ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

59. Malone: It is not improbable that Sh. caught this image from Phaer’s AEneid, book iv [line 246.—Clarendon]:—

‘And now approaching neere, the top be seeth and mighty lms
Of Atlas, mountain tough, that Heauen on boystrous shoulders beares: ...
There first on ground with wings of might doth Mercury arrive.’

Clarendon: The first seven books of Phaer’s translation were published in 1558, the whole AEneid in 1573, the two last books and the major part of the tenth being translated by Thomas Twyne.

67. batten] Wedgwood: To thrive, to feed, to become fat. Dutch bat, bet, better, more. Steevens: Thus, Marlowe’s Jew of Malta [p. 297, ed. Dyce, 1850]: ‘...a mess of porridge that will preserve life, make her round and plump, and batten more than you are aware.’ Also, Claudius Tiberius Nero, 1607: ‘...and for milk I batten’d was with blood.’ Caldecott: Thus, Milton’s Lycidas, l. 29: ‘Batten our flocks with the fresh dews of night.' Dyce (Glass.): 'To batten (grow fat), pingueaco.'—Coles's Lat. and Eng. Dict. Clarendon: Cotgrave gives 'to battle' as equivalent to 'Prendre chair,' s. v. 'Chair.' The word 'battles' is no doubt derived from the same root. It occurs transitively in the above quotation from Marlowe and Milton, and intransitively in Jonson's Fox, I, i: 'With these thoughts so battens.'

69. hey-day] Steevens: Thus, in Ford's 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, 1633:
'—must The hey-day of your luxury be fed Up to a surfeit.' Caldecott: High day is Johnson's explanation. It must mean the meridian glow. See 'such high-day wit.'—Mer. of Ven. II, ix, 98. Wedgwood: German Heyda! Heyda! exclamations of high spirits, active enjoyment. Hence, hey-day, the vigor and high spirits of youth, where the spelling is probably modified under an erroneous impression that there is something in the meaning of the word which indicates a certain period of life. Clarendon: The meaning is obvious, but the derivation uncertain.

71. step] Collier (ed. 2): Stoop is from the (MS) with evident fitness, in reference to the disadvantageous comparison Ham, is drawing. Elze pronounces this a brilliant emendation.

71. Sense] Warburton: From what philosophy our editors learnt this, I cannot tell. Since motion depends so little upon sense, that the greatest part of motion in the universe is amongst bodies devoid of sense. We should read: 'Else, could you not have notion,' i.e. intellect, reason, &c. This alludes to the famous peripatetic principle of Nil, fit in intellectu, quod non fuerit in sensu. Capell (i, 140): 'Sense' is reason; since she moved and performed other actions that belonged to humanity, the presumption was she had the reason belonging to it. Steevens: Whichsoever of the readings be the true one, the poet was not indebted to this boasted philosophy [referred to by Warburton] for his choice. Malone: 'Sense' has been already used for sensation in line 38, above. Staunton: The meaning is: 'Sense (i.e. the sensibility to appreciate the distinction between external objects) you must have, or you would no longer feel the impulse of desire.' This signification of 'motion' might be illustrated by numerous examples from our early writers, but the accompanying out of Sh. will suffice: Meas. for Meas. I, iv, 59; Oth. I, iii, 95; Ibid. I, iii, 334. Clarendon: 'Motion' is emotion, as in Meas. for Meas. cited above.
Moorely inclines to Staunton's explanation.

73. apoplex'd] Clarendon: We have 'apoplex,' for 'apoplexy,' in Ben Jonson, Fer. I, i, p. 188, ed. Gifford: 'How does his apoplex?' And in Beau. & Fl.
Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd
But it reserved some quantity of choice,
To serve in such a difference. What devil was't
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope.
O shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,
If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,
To flaming youth let virtue be as wax

Pope, Han.

Pope, Han.

Philaster, II, ii: 'She's as cold of her favour as an apoplex.' The word is not found in Sh.; for the reading 'apoplex' in 2 Hen. IV: IV, iv, 130, is a conjectural emendation made by Pope for the metre's sake.

CLARENDON: 'Would not err so,' the sense being completed by what follows.

Hudson: Sense was never so dominated by the delusions of insanity but that it retained some power of choice.

CLARENDON: 'Portion.' Some disparagement is implied in the word, as in III, ii, 38; V, i, 258; King John, V, iv, 23.

CLARENDON: 'The Hoodwinke play, or hoodmanblinde, in some places called the blindness.'—Baret's Alvarie. Collier (ed. 2): An explanation of the game, if wanted, may be found in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes.

CLARENDON: See All's Well, IV, iii, 136. Cotgrave gives: 'Clignemusset.' The childish play called Hodman blind, Harrie-racket, or, are you all hid.'

WHITE: Hamner's change is 'nonsense.' White: Hamner's change is very specious.

STEEVENS: Mutineers are called 'mutines' in V, ii, 6. M. WALTERS: 'mutine' anciently signified to rise in mutiny. Thus, in Knolle's History of the Turks, 1603: 'The Janissaries—became wonderfully discontented and began to mutine in diverse parts of the citie.' CLARENDON: See Jonson's Sejanus, III, i: 'Had but thy legions there rebell'd or mutined.' The verb does not occur again in Sh. Cotgrave gives: 'Mutiner: to mutine,' and 'Mutinature: a mutiner.' This form, mutiner, occurs in Cor. I, i, 254, but in Temp. III, ii, 41, F, has 'mutineere.'

90. grained] Marsh (Lectures on the English Language, New York, 1859, p. 67, et seq.) : Granum, in Latin, signifies a seed or kernel, and it was early applied to all small objects resembling seeds, and finally to all minute particles. Hence it was applied to the round, seed-like form of the dried body, or rather ovarium, of an insect of the genus coccus, which furnished a variety of red dyes. Granum becomes grana in Spanish, graine in French, and grain in English, meaning a dye produced by the coccus insect, often called in commerce kermes. The color obtained from kermes or grain was peculiarly durable. When, then, a merchant recommended his purple stuffs as being dyed in grain, he originally meant that they were dyed with kermes, and would wear well; and this phrase was afterwards applied to other colors, as a mode of expressing the quality of durability. See Com. of Err. III, ii, 108; and Twelfth Night, 1, v, 256. In both these examples [as also in the present instance from Hamlet] it is the sense of permanence (a well-known quality of the purple produced by the grain or kermes) that is expressed. It is familiarly known that if wool be dyed before spinning, the color is usually more permanent than when the spun yarn or manufactured cloth is first dipped in the tincture. When the original sense of grain grew less familiar, and it was used chiefly as expressive of fastness of color, the name of the effect was transferred to an ordinary known cause, and dyed in grain, originally meaning dyed with kermes, then dyed with fast color, came at last to signify dyed in the wool or other raw material. Clarendon: Cotgrave has ‘Graine: . . . graine wherewith cloth is dyed in graine; Scarlet dye, Scarlet in graine.’

II, ch. ii, p. 238, we are told that 'Ensame is the purging of a hawk from her glut and grease.' From the next page in the same work we learn that the glut is 'a slimy substance in the belly of the hawk.'—Henley: In the West of England the inside fat of a goose, when dissolved by heat, is called its seam. White: The phrase is so gross that, were it not for Hamlet's mood, we might willingly believe that incestuous of Q.Q is the true text. [Cotgrave gives: 'Gramousse, a dish made of slices of cold meat fried with Hogs seame.' There is also a note on this passage in the valuable essay: New Shakespearean Interpretations, Edin. Rev. Oct. 1872, p. 355, but the foregoing explanations are ample for so unsavory a subject. Ed.]

97. tithe] Stratmann: Kyth of the Q1 is evidently the true reading.

98. vice] Theobald was the first who noted that this means 'that buffoon character which used to play the Fool in old Plays.' In the Variorum notes to 2 Hen. IV: III, ii, 343, various fanciful etymologies of the word are given. Douce (i, 468) closes the discussion by showing that the character in the old moral-plays, known as the 'Vice,' was doubtless so named from the vicious qualities attributed to him, and from the mischievous nature of his general conduct. Collier (Hist. of Eng. Dram. Poetry, ii, 264, et seq.) gives the best account of this curious personage in a passage quoted by Dyce (Glass.): As the Devil now and then appeared without the Vice, so the Vice sometimes appeared without the Devil. Malone tells us that 'the principal employment of the Vice was to belabor the Devil;' but, although he was frequently so engaged, he had higher duties. He figured now and then in the religious plays of a later date, and, in The Life and Repentance of Mary Magdalen, 1567, he performed the part of her lover, before her conversion, under the name of Infidelity; in King Darius, 1565, he also acted a prominent part, by his own impulses to mischief, under the name of Iniquity, without any prompting from the representative of the principle of evil. Such was the general style of the Vice, and as Iniquity he is spoken of by Sh. (Rich. III: III, i, 82) and Ben Jonson (Staple of News, second Intermean). The Vice and Iniquity seem, however, sometimes to have been distinct persons, and he was not unfrequently called by the name of particular vices; thus, in Lusty Juvenis, the Vice performs the part of Hypocrisy; in Common Conditions he is called Conditions; in Like will to Like, he is named Nichol New-angle; in The Trial of Treason his part is that of Inclination; in All for Money he is called Sin; in Tom Tyler and His Wife, Desire; and in Appius and Virginia, Haphazard. . . . Though Douce is unquestionably correct when he states that the Vice 'was generally dressed in a fool's habit' [hence the expression in Hamlet, 'A king of shreds and patches.'—Dyck], he did not by any means constantly wear the parti-colored habiliments of a fool; he was sometimes required to act a gallant, and now and then to assume the disguise of virtues it suited his purpose to personate. In The Trial of Treasure, 1567, he was not only provided, as was customary, with his wooden dagger, but, in order to render him more ridiculous, with a pair of spectacles (no doubt of a preposterous size). . . . The Vice, like the Fool, was sometimes furnished with a dagger of lath, and it was not unusual that it should be gilt. . . . Tattle [in Jonson's Staple of News] observes that 'there is never a fiend to carry him [the Vice] away,' and in the first Inter-mean of the same play Mirth leads us to suppose that it was a very common termination of the adventures of the Vice for him to be carried off to hell on the back of the Devil; 'he would carry away the Vice on his back, quick to hell, in every play where he came.' In The Longer thou livest the more Fool thou art, and in Like will to Like, the Vice is disposed of nearly in this summary manner: in the first, Confusion carries him to the Devil, and in the last, Lucifer bears him off to the infernal regions on his shoulders. In King Darius the Vice runs to hell of his own accord, to escape from Constancy, Equity, and Charity. According to Bishop Harsnet (in a passage cited by Malone,—Shakespeare, by Boswell, iii, 27), the Vice was in the habit of riding and beating the Devil, at other times than when he was carried against his will to punishment.

that date, in this scene, the spirit was not apparelled as when it had before appeared on the platform. This is important, because it completely explains Hamlet's exclamation in line 135. In the (MS) it is unarmed. If, therefore, the Ghost did not wear a 'nightgown,' he was unarmed at the time of the old annotator. ELZE: 'Who,' asks Goethe (Nachgelassene Werke, vol. v, p. 61), in reference to the stage-direction in Q, 'does not feel a momentary pang on comprehending this? to whom is it not repulsive? And yet when we grasp it, and reflect upon it, we find that it is the right way.' The Ghost is not here introduced, as in Act I, in warlike guise, but in his every-day clothing. . . . We must not be too precise in the matter of this nightgown,—it refers to the ordinary clothes of the old king. KRIGHTLEY (Exp. p. 294): As the Ghost makes but one short speech, if it could be so managed, it would be more psychologic and effective for him to remain invisible, except to Ham, mentally, and his voice only be heard by the audience. CLARENDON: Nightgown here is the same as dressing-gown.

103. me . . . me] MARSHALL (p. 51): The use of the singular number may be accidental, or it may intimate that Ham. felt this visitation to be addressed to him alone. On the former occasion he used the plural.

107. time and passion] JOHNSON: That, having suffered time to slip and passion to cool, lets go, &c. CLARENDON: Or rather the indulgence of mere passion has diverted him from the execution of his purpose. COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) has 'fume for 'time.' We do not adopt 'fume, because, though it may have been the word used by some actor when the old annotator saw the play, we doubt if it were the word of Sh., who probably used 'lapse'd in time' to indicate Hamlet's indecision, which had allowed the proper period for revenge to escape. ELZE applauds and adopts 'fume.'

But look, amazement on thy mother sits;
Oh, step between her and her fighting soul;
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works;
Speak to her, Hamlet.

_Ham._ How is it with you, lady?

_Queen._ Alas, how is't with you,
That you do bend your eye on vacancy
And with the incorporeal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,
Starts up and stands an end. O gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Whalley: Not only the hair of animals having neither life nor sensation was called an excrement, but the feathers of birds had the same appellation. Thus, in Izaak Walton's _Compleat Angler_, P. I, c. i, p. 9, ed. 1766: 'I will not undertake to mention the several kinds of fowl by which this is done, and his curious palate pleased by day; and which, with their very excrements, afford him a soft lodging at night.' Nares: Everything that appears to vegetate or grow upon the human body; as the hair, the beard, the nails. Dyck (Gloss.): 'And albeit hayre were of it selve the most abiet excrement that were, yet should Poppeas hayre be reputed honourable. I am not ignorant that hayre is noted by many as an excrement, a fleeting commodity. . . . An excrement it is, I deny not,' &c.—Chapman's _Justification of a strange action of Nero_, &c., 1629, sig. It is remarkable that we have the same error in Meas. for Meas. III, i, 24. The ‘piteous action’ of the Ghost could not alter things already effected, but might move Ham, to a less stern mood of mind. STRATMANN pronounces this conj. of Singer’s very plausible. HUDSON: I can find no meaning in ‘effects’ that will run smooth with the context. CLARENDON: The accomplishment of my stern purposes.

The actresses make the Queen as mad as Ham,, and are generally applauded for their mistake.

STEEVENS, not having the aid afforded by Q,, endeavored to get rid of the discrepancy between the ‘armor’ of the earlier scenes and the ‘habit’ here by punctuating the line thus: ‘My father—in his habit—as he lived’ MASON (p. 390): A man’s armor, who is used to wear it, may be called his habit, as well as any other kind of clothing. ‘As he lived’ means ‘as if he were alive—as if he lived.’ [It is probable, as CLARENDON suggests, that ‘the Ghost appears in the ordinary dress of the king.’]

Queen. O Hamlet, thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the half.
Good night; but go not to mine uncle's bed;
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.

151. weeds] Johnson: Do not, by any new indulgence, heighten your former offences.

152-155. Forgive ... good.] Staunton: Although the modern edd. uniformly print this as if Ham addressed it to the Queen, nothing can be more evident than that it is an impleon to his own virtue. [Staunton therefore marks it as an 'Aside,' with a comma after 'Forgive me this,'] Clarke: Surely the context shows that Ham asks his mother to pardon the candor of his virtuous reproach, emphasizing it by line 153. Daniel (p. 75) also suggested a comma between 'this' and 'my.' [I agree with Clarendon, that Staunton's 'Aside' has great probability. Ed.]

153. fatness ... pursy] Delius: The same connection of ideas between these words is repeated in V, ii, 274. Clarendon: Cotgrave gives 'Poulaif ... Parsie, short-winded, breathing with difficulty.'

155. courb] Steevens: Bend and truckle. From French courber. So, in the Vision of Piers Ploughman, l. 617 (ed. T. Wright): 'Thanne I courbed on my knees, And cried hire of grace.' Clarendon adds line 880 also. Walker (Crit. iii, 267): It would be better, for distinctness' sake, to write, with Fa, courb; as Cary does, Purse. x, l. 104. Daniel (p. 75) to the same effect.

156. thou] Note the use of the more affectionate 'thou.'

157. worse] Seymour (II, 190): The Queen means by this that her heart is divided between compunction at her misconduct and a sense of her duty.

157, 158. Merely: The manly compassion of a pure heart to the weak and fallen could not express itself with more happy persuasiveness than in this reply, which takes the unhappy Queen's mere wail of sorrow and transmutes it to a soul-strengthening resolve.

161, 162. eat... devil] THEOBALD: 'Habits devil' arose from the supposed necessity of contrasting devil and angel. 'Habits evil' I owe to the sagacity of Dr Thirlby. That is, custom, which, by inuring us to ill habits, makes us lose the apprehension of their being really ill, as easily will reconcile us to the practice of good actions. Theobald, in his correspondence with Warburton (Nichols's Illustr. of Lit. ii, 574), says: 'I would read and point "doth eat Of habit's evil," &c., i.e. of the evil of habit.' [Herein he is followed by Singer (ed. 2) and White. Ed.] JOHNSON: I think Thirlby's conjecture wrong; angel and devil are evidently opposed. MALONE: I incline to think with Dr Thirlby. STEVENS: I would read: Or habit's devil. The poet first styles custom a monster, and may aggravate and amplify his description by adding, that it is the 'demon who presides over habit.'—That monster custom, or habit's devil, is yet an angel in this particular. BOSWELL: 'Habit's devil' means a devil in his usual habits. BECKET (i, 60) and MITFORD (Gent. Maga. 1845) both conjectured 'If habit's devil;' the latter paraphrases: 'If that monster, custom, which in general is the devil of habit, leading to evil, yet in this thing acts the good part of angel,' &c. CALDECOTT: 'That monster, custom, who devours all sense, all just and correct feeling, (being also) the evil genius of (our) propensities or habits, is, nevertheless, in this particular a good angel.' It has been suggested that if a comma were placed after 'habits' the sense would be—'A monster or devil, who makes mankind insensible to the quality of actions which are habitual.' KNIGHT: The edd. who have made 'habits' the genitive case cannot explain their own reading. As we print the passage it means: custom, who destroys all nicety of feeling,—sense,—sensibility,—who is the devil that governs our habits,—is yet an angel in this, &c. COLLIER (ed. i): Our punctuation means, 'that monster, custom, who is a devil, devouring all sense of habit, is still an angel in this,' &c. SINGER (ed. ii): The old copy indicates clearly the misprint, for the word is here devil, while just below and elsewhere it is uniformly devill when the evil spirit is meant. DELIUS (ed. i): The opposition between 'angel' and 'devil' shows that the latter as well as the former refers to 'monster, custom:' 'devil,' therefore, must be in apposition, separated, it is true, from the subject by the subordinate clause. COLLIER (ed. ii): We now adopt Thirlby's emendation, although it is very possible that an opposition between 'devil' and 'angel' was intended. Still, the passage is decidedly corrupt. WHITE: The text of the Qq is clearly wrong. 'Angel' is opposed to 'monster' in the line above. The old text also nullifies the force of the important word 'likewise,' two lines below. STAUNTON: The trifling change we have taken the liberty to make, while doing little violence to the original, may be thought, it is hoped, to give at least as good a meaning as any other which has been proposed. KEIGHTLEY: The verb 'eats' here could never have come from the poet's pen; for it makes pure nonsense. I read create with the greatest confidence, of which the first two letters must have been effaced in the poet's MS. We have an exact parallel in smell, 'all,' in Timon, I, ii, 132. 'Sense' seems here to signify kind, manner, way. [Keightley's text reads: 'That monster, custom, who all sense doth create Of habits, devil is angel yet in this,' &c., which is to me unintelligible. Ed.] CLARENDON: The words as they stand yield a very intelligible sense and require no alteration. That monster, Custom, who destroys all natural feeling and prevents it from being exerted, and is the malignant attendant on habits, is yet angel in this respect, &c. The double meaning of the word 'habits' suggested the 'frock or livery' in l. 164. MOBERLY:

This noble passage contains Shakespeare's philosophy of custom (Bosc), in which, happier than some professed moralists, he sees that the function of habit is to work upward towards a formed resolution.

164. livery] MOBERLY: Just as a new dress or uniform becomes familiar to us by habit, so custom enables us readily to execute the outward and practical part of the good and fair actions which we inwardly desire to do.

169. master] MALONE: For the insertion of the word curb I am answerable.
The printer or corrector of a late Quarto, finding the line nonsense, omitted the word either, and substituted master in its place. The modern editors have accepted the substituted word, and yet retain either; by which the metre is destroyed. The word omitted in the first copy was undoubtedly a monosyllable. STEEVENS: This very rational conjecture may be countenanced by the same expression in Mer. of Ven. IV, i, 217. SINGER (ed. i) [reading 'either quell,' followed by MOBERLY]: The occurrence of curb in so opposite a sense just before is against Malone's emendation.
STAUNTON: 'Master,' which, as it affords sense, though destructive to the metre, we retain, not, however, without acknowledging a preference for Malone's emendation.
WALKER, Vers. 75: Read 'either master th' devil,' &c. Moreover, 'curb' occurs fourteen lines before.—Crit. i, 308. BAILEY (ii, 12): Ham. means to say that custom can either bring the devil into our natures, or throw him out. I therefore propose: 'And either house the devil,' which forms an appropriate counterpart to ‘throw him out.’ FORSYTH proposed the same word in his Notes, &c., 102, and also in N. & Qu., 1 Dec. ’66. ELZE (Athenæum, 11 Aug. ’66) proposes, ‘And either ausher the devil,’ and thinks that the similarity of sound in the two consecutive words, ‘either usher,’ may have caused the compiler of Q, to omit the latter. H. D. (Athenæum, 18 Aug. ’66): Why not read, ‘To master the devil, and throw him out.’ BOLTON CORNEY (N. & Qu., 8 Dec. ’66): Read ‘And either aid the,’ &c. J. WETHERELL (N. & Qu., 22 Dec. ’66) believes that sound and sense are satisfied by ‘And his there the devil;’ a speedy summons is hereby contrasted with a dismissal implied in ‘throw him out.’ CARTWRIGHT (New Readings, &c., p. 37): Read ‘And either lay the,’ &c. NICHOLSON (N. & Qu., 19 Dec. 1868): I propose, ‘And either throned,’ &c. Its alliteration explains its omission, and why ‘cast out,’ the wording of every version, was changed into ‘throw out.’ It restores to the line its musical tone. It gives the exact sense required. Persistence in well-doing, whether by doing good or by leaving evil undone, exercises the Tempter with wondrous potency; but persistence in evil so destroys rebellious conscience, that the prince of this world resists of our vacant throne, and makes of us willing and unrespective servants for his work. Lastly, it gives not only the exact sense, but the full sense, required by the context, whether above or below it. CLARENDON: It seems more probable that something is omitted which is contrasted with ‘throw out,’ and this may have been ‘lay’ or ‘lodge.’ The latter was the technical word used in Harneet’s Declaration, c. 12. MORERLY [reading ‘either quell’]: Either quell him once for all, or baffle his attacks whenever they arise. INGLEBY (Sh. Hermeneutics, p. 125) records two emendations suggested to him by friends: SYLVESTER proposes, ‘either mask the devil,’ of which Q3 is the corruption. Compare III, 1, 47-49. And C. J. MUNRO ‘half-seriously’ suggests: ‘And entertain the devil.’ ‘It is not easy to discover,’ says Ingleby, ‘why [the words suggested by Malone, Singer, and the rest] should find more favor than a score of others just as good.’ CURB suggests rein, rule, thrall, bind, chain, &c.; quell, lay, and couch suggest charm, worst, quench, foil, bulk, crouch, thwart, daunt, shame, cow, tame, &c.; while aid suggests fire, route, stir, serve, feed, &c. Besides which, there are many disyllables that beset the sense and measure, as abate, abase, &c. And why not read ‘ever-master,’ which occurs in a former scene? Thus we see what a wealth of suggestion has been ignored! We venture to call attention to the evident requirements of the passage: ‘The stamp of nature’ is not new to us in this connection, nor in this play; we have had it twice in the second ghost-scene, viz. ‘the vicious mole of nature,’ and ‘the stamp of one defect.’ Now Hamlet would say, ‘Use almost can change, or convert, this stamp of nature,’ so that an antithesis is not only not required, but is impertinent. Use, he would say, can either subdue ‘habit’s devil’ by following out his own prescription of gradual weaning from evil, or (if the worst come to the worst, and revolution be necessary) cast him out; and either of these can such use, or change of habit, effect ‘with wondrous potency.’ The keynote of the whole passage is ‘Reformation, by gradually subduing evil habits,’ and so far from Hamlet’s advice, ‘assume a virtue if you have it not,’ being a recommendation of hypocrisy, it is given solely with the view of facilitating inward amendment, and is therefore honest and sincere. The missing word, then, must at least import the subduing of the devil of habit. In the First Quarto we have the expression, ‘And win [i.e. wean] yourself by little as you may’ from the sin to which you

[the Queen] have habituated yourself. Now, that weaning by little and little, or gradually weaning the will and affections from the customary sin, 'recurring and suggesting still,' is just what the missing word, were it recovered, would assuredly be found to express or imply. Lay and shame are equally acceptable in sense, and both afford a perfect rhythm. Perhaps shame is the finer reading of the two. At the same time it must be owned that Hamlet's prescription is calculated to do little for the sinner; at best, we fear, to 'skin and film the rancorous place.' We can hardly say that conjecture has yet determined the best reading here, though it cannot be said that sufficient indications are wanting for its guidance. Unfortunately, it is in the very nature of the case that some doubt should continue to vex this passage, after conjecture has done its work.

French Dictionarie, appended to Cotgrave, we have 'A gibbe (or old male cat).

Maco.' [A misprint for Matou; which Nares silently corrects, but which is unnoticed by Dyce and Clarendon. Ed.] Coles has 'Gib, a contraction for Gilbert;' and 'a Gib-cat, catus, felis mas.' KEIGHTLEY: I read 'gib-cat;' as 'gib' never occurs alone. We surely would not say a tom for a tom-cat, a jack for a jackass, a jack-daw, &c. CLARENDON: Graymalkin was the female cat. The toad, bat, and cat were supposed to be familiars of witches, and acquainted with their mistresses' secrets.

194. famous ape] WARNER: Sir John Suckling, in one of his letters, may possibly allude to the same story: 'It is the story of the jackanapes and the partridges; thou starest after a beauty till it be lost to thee, and then let'st out another, and starest after that till it is gone too.' CLARENDON: No one has yet found the fable here alluded to.

198. breathe] CALDECOTT: 'Most distantly glance at.' See II, i, 44. MOBERLY: The Queen keeps her word, and is rewarded by the atoning punishment which befalls her in this world. Rue is herb of grace to her, as poor Ophelia says.

200. England] MALONE: Sh. does not inform us how Ham. came to know that he was to be sent to England. Ros. and Guil. were made acquainted with the King's intentions for the first time in the very last scene; and they do not appear to have had any communication with the Prince since that time. Add to this, that in a subsequent scene, when the King, after the death of Pol., informs Ham. he was to go to England, he expresses great surprise, as if he had not heard anything of it before.—This last, however, may, perhaps, be accounted for as contributing to his design of passing for a madman. STEAKNS (Sh. Treasury, &c., p. 366): We may infer that Ham. had managed to place Hor. in some office or employment about the court where he could get at state secrets. MILES (p. 52): Ham., on his way to his mother's closet, must have overheard the interview between the King and Ros, and Gull. For scarcely in any other way could he have foreknown this royal determination to send him away.

202. There's letters] See IV, v, 5; Macb. II, iii, 137; and ABBOTT, § 335.
203. fang'd] JOHNSON: 'Adders with their fangs, or poisonous teeth, undrawn.' SEYMOUR (ii, 191): It means, rather, with their poisonous teeth extracted; CALDECOTT inclines to this interpretation.
204. They] CLARENDON: The nominative is repeated for clearness, after an intervening parenthesis. See 'he,' II, i, 84.
206. enginer] For list of nouns with the suffix -er, signifying the agent, see WALKER (Vers. 217), or ABBOTT, § 443. For words with accent nearer the beginning than with us, see ABBOTT, § 492. See 'truster,' I, ii, 172; 'picker,' I, v, 163.
207. hoist] DYCE (Glos.): For hoised or hoisted (not as Caldecott explains it: 'i.e. mount. Hoist is used as a verb neuter'). CLARENDON: If it is the participle of the verb hoist, it is the common abbreviated form for the participles of verbs ending in a dental. [See I, ii, 20.]
207. petar] CLARENDON: Cotgrave gives: 'Petart: A Petard, or Petarre; an Engine (made like a Bell, or Mortar) wherewith strong gates are burst open.'
209. at] ABBOTT, § 143: 'At' is used like near with a verb of motion, where we should use up to. MOBERLY: Like Virgil's 'It caele clamar.'
210. line] MALONE: Still alluding to a countermine.
211. packing] CLARENDON: 'Contriving,' 'plotting.' There is, of course, a play upon the other sense of the word: 'to be off quickly.' [DELIUS's interpretation of one of its meanings: 'sich belasten,' to load one's self, referring to Hamlet's lugging off Pol., is, I think, a little too fine spun. ED.]

first attempt to polish our language to show that anciently this word was not so offensive to delicacy as at present. Caldecott, while conceding this, nevertheless thinks that 'there is a coarseness and want of feeling in this part of the conduct, if not in the language, of Hamlet,—an excuse for which we seek in vain at this time in the peculiarity or necessities of his situation;' and he can account for it only by supposing that it must have been in compliance with the rude taste of the age. Halliwell: This is one of those words which the silly caprice of fashion has invested with an imaginary coarseness. I have seen a letter, written about a century ago, in which a lady of rank, addressing a gentleman, speaks of her guts with the same nonchalance with which we should now write stomach. Staunton: It was commonly used where we should employ entrails, and in this place really signifies no more than lack-brain or shallow-pate.

212. Staunton: A consideration of the exigencies of the theatre in Shakespeare's time, which not only obliged an actor to play two or more parts in the same drama, but to perform such service offices as are now done by attendants of the stage, shows that this line is a mere interpolation to afford the player an excuse for removing the body. We append a few examples where the same expedient is adopted for the same purpose. Among them the notable instance of Sir John Falstaff carrying off the body of Harry Percy on his back,—an exploit as clumsy and unseemly as Hamlet's 'tugging out' Pol., and, like that, perpetuated on the modern stage only from sheer ignorance of the circumstances which originated such a practice: Rom. & 'Jul. III, i, 201; Rich. II.: V, v, 118, 119; 1 Hen. IV: V, iv, 160; 1 Hen. VI: I, iv, 110; Ibid. II, v, 130, 121; Ibid. IV, vii, 91, 92; 2 Hen. VI: IV, i, 145; Ibid. IV, x, 86, 87; Ibid. V, ii, 61–65; 3 Hen. VI: II, v, 113; Ibid. II, v, 121, 122; Ibid. VI, vi, 92, 93; Rich. III: i, iv, 287, 288; Lear, IV, vi, 280–282; Tro. & Cym. V, viii, 21, 22; 'Jul. Cæs. III, ii, 261; Ibid. V, v, 78, 79; Ant. & Cæs. IV, ix, 31, 32; Ibid. IV, xiv, 138. These instances from Sh. alone, and they could easily be multiplied, will suffice to bring into view one of the inconveniences to which the elder dramatists were subject through the paucity of actors; and at the same time, by exhibiting the mode in which they endeavored to obviate the difficulty, may afford a key to many passages and incidents that before appeared anomalous.

215. foolish prating] Walker (Crit. i, 25): Write foolish-prating; unless, indeed, 'foolish' is opposed to 'grave,' and 'prating' to 'secret.'

215. a . . . knave] Moberly: These are almost exactly the words used by the porter at Holyrood, when Rizzio's body was placed on a chest near his lodge (Froude, viii, 254).

216. to draw] Clarendon: For the construction compare III, ii, 320. Steevens: Sh. has been unfortunate in his management of the story of this play, the most striking circumstances of which arise so early in its formation as not to leave him room for a conclusion suitable to the importance of its beginning. After this last interview with the Ghost the character of Ham. has lost all its consequence.
Good night, mother.

217. Good night, mother] Hunter (ii, 257): This scene has always been admired as one of the masterpieces of this great dramatic writer; and there are in it undoubtedly fine opportunities for the display of an actor's powers,—striking situations, and also fine poetry. But the question arises, To what purpose all this excitement and bustle? The scene appears to have been written for its own sake, not helping forward the story. Except that Pol. is accidentally killed in the course of it, the parties are left precisely where they were, Ham. having only in this forcible manner signified to his mother the displeasure which he felt at her conduct. But as the play was originally written this scene had a purpose. Ham. reveals to his mother his knowledge of his uncle's guilt, and his purpose of revenge; and she engages to conceal and to assist. From this time the Queen keeps up appearances with her husband, but is secretly a friend to Ham.; and there is an entire scene, afterwards withdrawn, between her and Hor., in which Hor. communicates to her confidentially the return of Ham. from England, when the dialogue ends with her saying: [see Appendix, p. 77, lines 1779-1781.] This removes all ambiguity respecting the part which the poet intended the Queen should take; according to the present regulation, her precise situation is not clearly exhibited.
ACT IV

SCENE I. A room in the castle.

Enter King, Queen, Rosencrantz, and Guildenstern.

King. There's matter in these sighs; these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.
Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.—

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea and wind, when both contend

Act iv.] JOHNSON: This modern division into Acts is here not very happy, for the pause is made at a time when there is more continuity of action than in almost any other of the scenes. CALDECOTT suggests, and ELZE agrees with him, that Act IV should begin with the present IV, iv. The latter suggests that probably, as indicated by the Qq, the Queen goes to seek out the King as soon as Ham. has left her, and having met him in the gallery, enters with him and his courtiers one of the King's apartments.

1. heaves] WALKER (Crit. iii, 268) prefers the punctuation of the Qq, and understands 'which' before 'You.' CORSON: The King uses 'profound' equivocally, as it may mean deep literally, anddeep in significance, and upon the latter meaning 'translate' bears.

7. Mad] CLARKE: The Queen both follows her son's injunction of keeping up the belief in his madness, and, with maternal ingenuity, makes it the excuse for his

Whips out his rapier, cries 'a rat, a rat!'
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The unseen good old man.

King. O heavy deed!
It had been so with us, had we been there;
His liberty is full of threats to all,
To you yourself, to us, to every one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?
It will be laid to us, whose providence
Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,
This mad young man; but so much was our love,
We would not understand what was most fit,
But, like the owner of a foul disease,
To keep it from divulging, let it feed rash deed. This affords a clue to Hamlet's original motive in putting 'an antic disposition on' and feigning insanity; he foresaw that it might be useful to obviate suspicion of his having a steadily-pursued object in view, and to account for whatever hostile attempt he should make.

O'er whom his very madness, like fine ore
Among a mineral of metals base, Shows itself pure. He weeps for what is done.

King. O Gertrude, come away!
The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
But we will ship him hence; and this vile deed
We must, with all our majesty and skill,
Both countenance and excuse.—Ho, Guildenstern!

Re-enter Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid;
Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd him.
Go seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body
Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.—

26. mineral] Steevens: 'Minerals' are mines. Thus, Hall's Satires, b. vi (p. 154, ed. Singer): 'Shall it not be a wild-fig in a wall, Or fired brimstone in a mineral? MALONE: Minshu defines 'mineral' to be 'anything that grows in Mines, and contains metals,' CALDECOTT: It is here used for a mass or compound mine of metals. STAUNTON: Rather, a metallic vein in a mine; we should now say a lode.
26. metals] M. Mason suggests metal, as much improving the construction of the passage.
27. weeps] Morerly: Either this is an entire invention of the Queen's, or Hamlet's mockeries had really been succeeded by sorrow. [See Doering, in Appendix, Vol. II.]

40. slander] Theobald (Sh. Rest. p. 108) suggested Happily, slander or rumour, as being at least very near, in substance, the words that had dropped out of this line. He changed them in his ed. to 'For, haply, slander.' Capell (Notes, i. 141) says: 'For makes not so good connection as so;' and the majority of editors since his day have adopted this modification. The Cambridge Editors (Note xxiii): Malice, or Emvy, in the sense in which it is often used by Sh., would suit this passage as well as 'slander.' Tschirschwitz reads by this, suspicion, and understands it as referring to what the King 'means to do,' viz. send Hamlet to England. He also suggests that the lines following it down to 'woundless air' may have been an Aside. Stratmann: I think Tschirschwitz's reading the most suitable, but it might, perhaps, be improved by the substitution of so that for by this.

41. diameter] Morely: That is, 'slander can pass in direct line from hence to the antipodes without going round by the semi-circumference of the earth.'

Ros. Believe what?
Ham. That I can keep your counsel and not mine should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?
Ham. Ay, sir; that soaks up the king's countenance, his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end; he keeps them, like an ape doth nuts, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last an imperative, otherwise Ham. tells an untruth, for he had not buried the body.

12. to] For the indefinite use of the infinitive, see III, iii, 85, and Abbott, § 356.
12. sponge.] Corson defends the comma, maintaining, and rightly, that the sentence is not exclamatory. 'In modern English we should say "in being demanded by a sponge, what,"' &c. Coleridge: Hamlet's madness is made to consist in the free utterance of all the thoughts that had passed through his mind before;—in fact, in telling home-truths.
12. replication] Rushton (Sh. a Lawyer, p. 34): This is an exception of the second degree made by the plaintiff upon the answer of the defendant.
15. soaks] Bailey (ii, 343), in this speech of Hamlet's, would transpose the sentences, so that lines 19, 20, containing the simile of a sponge, should follow immediately 'authorities' in line 16; and for 'soaks up' he would read 'sucks up', and for 'gleaned' he suggests glutted.
15. countenance ... authorities] Clarendon: The first means favour, as in
I, iii, 113; V, i, 26. The latter, offices of authority.
17. nuts] Farmer conjectured, 'like an ape, an apple.' To this Malone objected, on the ground that Sh. then would have written 'as an ape,' &c., not 'like an ape.' But Walker (Crit. ii, 116) suspected Farmer to be right, having found in Hugh Holland a construction precisely similar: 'Where, like in Jove's [branes], Minerva keeps a coile.'
19. needs] Seymour (ii, 193) finds an equivocque here between to need and to knead.

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it; a knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing—

22. sponge... dry again] Caldecott: 'When princes... have used courtiers as sponges to drinke what juice they can from the poore people, they take pleasure afterwards to wring them out into their owne cisternes.'—R.C.'s Henr. Steph. Apology for Herodotus, 1608. Vespasian, when reproached for bestowing high office upon persons most rapacious, answered, 'that he served his turne with such officers as with sponges, which, when they had drunke their fill, were the fittest to be pressed.'—Barne's Rich's Faults, faults and nothing but faults, 1606; also Suetonius, Vespas. c. 16.

22. ear] Stevens: A proverb since Shakespeare's time.

26-27. The... body] Johnson: This answer I do not comprehend. Perhaps it should be,—The body is not with the King, for the King is not with the body. Jennens: The body, being in the palace, might be said to be with the King; though the King, not being in the same room with the body, was not with the body. Stevens: Perhaps this,—The body is in the King's house (i.e. the present King's), yet the King (i.e. he who should have been king) is not with the body. Intimating that the usurper is here, the true King in a better place. Or it may mean—the guilt of the murder lies with the King; but the King is not where the body lies. Douce: The body, i.e. the external appearance or person of the monarch, is with his uncle; but that the real and lawful king is not in that body. Caldecott: The King is not yet cut off from life and sovereignty: his carcase remains to the King; but the King is not with the body or carcase that you seek; the King is not with Polonius. But Hamlet's answers are necessarily enigmatical. A more natural meaning is suggested: The image raised, the impression made upon the King's fears by the fate of Polonius, makes his body or carcase present to the fancy of the King, who knew and has said that 'it had been so with him had he been there;' but the King is not with the body, i.e. is not lying with Polonius. Others interpret, plainly enough, if admissibly: The body is with the King, i.e. intombed, or in the other world with the late, the real king; but the King, i.e. he who now wears the crown, the usurper, is not with the body. Singer: It may mean: The King is a body without a kingly soul, a thing—of nothing. Elze agrees with Eschenburg's explanation: The corpse is here with the King, but the King is not with it, i.e. he is as yet no corpse. Hudson: The meaning of this intended riddle, to the best of my guessing, is: The King's body is with the King, but not the King's soul: he's a King without kingsness. Morely: Apparently a sententious maxim from some political book. 'The body politic is joined to the King, yet the King is not to be considered part of the body politic, but a thing apart.' [The present editor agrees with Clarendon, that Ham. is talking nonsense designedly.]
SCENE III. Another room in the castle.

29. Of nothing] Johnson: Should it not be read: Or nothing? When the courtiers remark that Ham. has contemnously called the King a thing, Ham. defends himself by observing that the King must be a thing or nothing. Farmer and Steevens cite instances of the use of this not uncommon phrase, and Whalley cites Psalm cxlv, 4: 'Man is like a thing of nought.' [—Prayer Book Version. '—of vanity.'— Authorized Version.] Nares quotes Beau. & Fl. Humorous Lieutenant, IV, vi: 'And though a thing of nothing, thy thing ever.' [—p. 517, ed. Dyce.]

29. Hide...after] Hamner: There is a play among children thus called. Singer: Most probably what is now called 'whoop' or 'hide and seek.' White: The exclamation is merely one of Hamlet's signs of feigned madness. Moberly: Ham. sheathes his sword ('a Toledo or an English fox'—point of fox,' &c., probably from the name of a celebrated maker like Andrea di Ferrara), and, as if he were playing hide and seek, cries 'now the fox is hid: let all go after him.'

9, 10. diseases...relieved] Rushton (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 11): 'But I scarce me when so strange a sickness is to be recured of so unskillfull a Phisition, that either thou wilt be to bold to practise, or my body too weake to purge. But seeing a desperate disease is to be committted to a desperate Doctor, I will follow thy counsel, and become thy cure.'—[Euphuus, p. 67, ed. Arber.]

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

King. 'At supper'? where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten; a certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet. We fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots. Your fat king, and your lean beggar, is but variable service, two dishes, but to one table; that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king, and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm.

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see; if your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself.
But indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. [To some Attendants] Go seek him there.

44. is bent] CORSON: 'At bent' is the more forcible, expressing, as it does, the suspended readiness indicated by what precedes, 'the bark is ready,' 'the wind at help,' 'th' associates tend.'

47. cherub] CALDECOTT: This beauteous and sudden intimation of heavenly insight and interference, against the insidious purpose of the King's show of regard for Hamlet's welfare, flashes upon us with a surprise and interest rarely to be found or equalled, and worthy of this great master of the drama. COLLIER: 'Him' [of the Fr] seems to have no reference, unless Ham. be mentally adverting to his father, MOBERLY: The cherubs are angels of love; they therefore, of course, know of such true affection as the King's for Ham.

58. As] For instances of 'as' used parenthetically, equal to for so, see ABBOTT, § 119; IV, v, 159; V, ii, 323.

[ACT IV, SC. III]

Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red
After the Danish sword, and thy free awe Pays homage to us,—thou mayst not coldly set
Our sovereign process; which imports at full,
By letters conjuring to that effect,
The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England;
For like the hectic in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me; till I know 'tis done,
Howe'er my haps, my joys were ne'er begun.

[Exit.

38. thereof] CALDECOTT: May make thee a very intelligible suggestion to that effect.

60. free] CLARENDON: Awe still felt, though no longer enforced by the presence of Danish armies.

61. set] M. Mason: One of the common acceptations of the verb 'set' is to value or estimate; as we say, to set at nought. Malone thinks that it is an elliptical expression for set by. Singer denies the ellipsis, and quotes, without giving the authority, 'To sette or tell the pryce; estimare.' [Baret's Adwarie has: 'To set, or tell the price. Indicoure,' which makes nothing against Malone; because 'To set' is not used absolutely, but the full phrase is 'to set the price.' Ed.] Clarendon says that 'set' would not have been thus used had it not been familiar in the phrases, set at nought, set at a pin's fee, &c.

63. conjuring] THEOBALD (Sh. Rest. 109): If the 'letters,' importing the tenour of the process, were to that effect, they were certainly conjuring; but of no great use, when the sovereign process imported the same thing. Now a process might import a command, and letters conjuring a compliance with it be sent, and be of great efficacy, where the execution of the command was to be doubted of. Moreover, Ham. when he changed the substance of the commission would be likely to retain the form, and we find him using 'earnest conjurations.' As to the accent, Sh. generally accented the first syllable. Clarendon thinks 'conjuring' probably a misprint, although it yields a fair sense.

65. hectic] CLARENDON: Used as a substantive in Cotgrave: 'Hectique: Sicke of an Hectick, or continuall Feauer.' Only here, either as substantive or adjective, in Sh.

67. haps...began] JOHNSON: This being the end of a scene, should, according to Shakespeare's custom, be rhymed. Perhaps he wrote, 'Howe'er my hopes, my joys are not begun.' [Collier's (MS) has hopes.] If 'haps' be retained, the meaning will be: 'till I know 'tis done, I shall be miserable,' whatever befall me. WALKER (Crit. iii, 268): Begun, certainly; rhyme is demanded here. As to the rest, intruxo. LETTSOM (Footnote to Walker): Q, gives at least sense and English. [See lines 1612, 1613.] Tschischwitz, having found that gin is used for begin, suggests, reads, and defends 'my joys will ne'er be begun.'

For. Go softly on. [Exeunt Fortinbras and Soldiers.

Enter Hamlet, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and others.

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?
Cap. They are of Norway, sir.

6. eye] Steevens: Compare Ant. & Cleo. II, ii, 212. The phrase seems to have been a formulary for the royal presence. See The Establishment of the Household of Prince Henry, 1610: 'Also the gentleman-usher shall be careful to see and inform all such as doe service in the Prince's eye, that they perform their duties,' &c. Again, in The Regulations for the Government of the Queen's Household, 1627: '— all such as doe service in the Queen's eye.' [See IV, vii, 45.]

7. let] Delius construes 'let' like 'express,' 'We shall' being understood; and he has a comma after 'eye,' as has also Keightley.

8. softly] Staunton: That is, slowly. Clarendon: Compare Bacon, Essay, vi, p. 19: 'Like the going softly by one that cannot well see.' Collier: These words are probably addressed to his troops.

finished to the indecision of Ham., was perhaps omitted in the Fl on account of the extreme length of the play, and as not helping on the action. COLLIER: So important is it as a key to Hamlet's character, that its omission convinces us that the abbreviation of the play as we find it in Fl, was the work of the players and not of Sh. LLOYD (Crit. Essay, Singer's 2d ed. p. 345): Beautiful as the soliloquy in this scene is, I am disposed to think that the excision of it may have been deliberate,—as unnecessary, prolonging the action, and, it may be, exhibiting the weakness of Ham. too crudely; it shows him making the most definite of his resolutions to revenge precisely as he turns his back upon the last opportunity by quitting the country. The passage, however, with some others, is too fine to be suppressed, though I am inclined to think the poet sacrificed them, and worthwhile and properly they may take their place in brackets.

15. main] CLARENDON: The chief power. See II, ii, 56.

25, 26. Two... straw] As You Like It (Gent. Mag. Ix, 403): These lines are certainly given to Ham. very wrongly, as they undoubtedly belong to the Capt. Ham. appears entirely ignorant of the object of the Norwegian army. The Capt. speaks with contempt of the little patch of ground, which for five ducats he would not farm, to recover which so many souls were to be sacrificed and so much money expended. After this, Ham. begins very properly, 'This is an imposthume,' &c. Tschirschwitz goes still farther, and gives the whole speech down to 'Dies,' to the Capt., on the ground that this speech does not accord with what Ham. says afterwards, where honor is the cause that impels him to the struggle, not an 'imposthume of much wealth and peace.'

34. market] Johnson: That for which he sells his time. Seymour (ii, 195): This means his prime of life, the time at which he ought to exert his faculties to the best advantage and profit. Clarendon: Possibly, the business in which he employs his time.

36. discourse] See I, ii, 150. Johnson: Such latitude of comprehension, such power of reviewing the past and anticipating the future.

That capability and god-like reason
To fust in us unused. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple
Of thinking too precisely on the event,—
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom
And ever three parts coward,—I do not know Why yet I live to say 'This thing's to do,'
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and means,
To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me;
Witness this army, of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,
Whose spirit with divine ambition puff'd

40. scruple] See Abbott, § 168. Clarendon: Scruple which consists in thinking or results from thinking.
44. to do] For instances of the infinitive active where we should use the passive, see Abbott, § 359; Mach. V, vi, 5.
45. Sith] See II, ii, 6; and Abbott, § 132.
53-56. Rightly...stake] Johnson: This sentiment is partly just and partly romantic. 'Rightly...argument' is exactly philosophical. 'But...stake' is the idea of a modern hero. But then, says he, honor is an argument, or subject of debate, sufficiently great, and when honor is at stake, we must find cause of quarrel in a straw.
54. Is not to stir] [Does the 'not' belong to the copula or to the predicate? I think it belongs to the copula, and that there should be a comma after it: 'Is not, to stir,' &c. To stir without great argument, upon every trifling occasion, is not an attribute of greatness; it is rather the attribute of smallness, of a mere love of fighting; but it is the attribute of greatness to stir instantly and at a trifle when honor is touched. The mere fact that For. is astir, and Ham. is still, does not prove the former to be the greater man, or make him an example to the latter. But because, for the merest fantasy that his honor was touched, he was going to his grave
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw

And let all sleep, while to my shame I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That for a fantasy and trick of fame
Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough and continent
To hide the slain? Oh, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

as to a bed, herein lies the contrast and example to Ham. Moreover, when ‘not’ is joined to the copula, and a comma placed after it, the force of ‘But’ is felt, thus: True greatness is not (predicate), but it is this. Include the ‘not’ in the predicate, and ‘But’ becomes inconsequent: True greatness is (predicate), but it is this. Ca-pell perceived this, and added a second not as a compromise, embracing both readings: ‘Is not, not to stir,’ &c. Delius does not actually add the second not, but he says it is understood, or rather that the ‘not’ belongs to both copula and predicate. This discussion may seem trifling enough, but we must remember that: Rightly to punctuate is not, to put a stop without great argument, but greatly to find quarrel in a comma when Shakespeare’s at the stake. Ed.

58. blood] Clarendon: ‘Blood,’ which is stirred by passion, is here, as frequently, antithetical to reason and reflection. See III, ii, 64.

61. fame] Caldecott: That is, point of honor. Delius: ‘Of fame’ belongs to ‘fantasy’ as well as to ‘trick’—an illusion and a whim that promise fame.

his army,—with this flash of a better fortune for Denmark athwart the deepening drama, the Act should end. Ending here, the interval consumed by the voyage to England, the return of Laer. from Paris, and the expedition of For. to Poland and back, is thrown between the Acts,—its natural place. This proposed extension of the Third Act would make this greatest of tragedies the most symmetrical too; while the Fourth Act, relieved of a confusion which is now mistaken for an anticlimax, would be devoted with a single purpose to its two superb contrasts: the revenge of Laer. with the revenge of Ham., and the utter madness of Oph. with the semi-counterfeit lunacy of her lover. A gain almost as great for the closet as for the stage. MARSHALL (p. 77): The interval which elapses between this scene and the preceding is at least a month, and probably more. [Page 193.]—This may be seen by an examination of the remaining scenes. No break can occur at the end of this scene; the conversation between the King and Laer. in sc. vii is evidently part of that which ends this scene; the time occupied by sc. vi is merely sufficient for the King to explain to Laer. the circumstances of Polonius's death. We find from sc. vii that Ham. has returned, having been taken by the pirates on his second day out; how long he was detained by them does not appear; it must have been for some time, since between Acts IV and V there cannot elapse much more than two days, and at the end of Act V we find ambassadors announcing the death of Ros. and Guil., and For. returned from Poland, so that it is evident that the break implied by a new Act ought to occur at the end of IV, iv. Moreover, if Ophelia's madness were introduced at the beginning of a new Act, it would be more effective, and the interval which is supposed to have occurred would give color to the causes which produced it. [See notes on Act IV, p. 311.]

Enter...Gentleman] COLLIER: The omission in the Ff of the Gentleman was, no doubt, to avoid the employment of another actor. DYCE: There is certainly room for suspecting that the omission of the 'Gentleman' is to be attributed to the players. But be that as it may, there can be no doubt that if a modern editor adheres to F, in this omission, he ought to restore to Hor. (what comes very awkwardly from the Queen) lines 14, 15; and that, whether he chooses to retain or omit the 'Gentleman,' he ought to make the Queen's speech begin with line 16. WHITE: I see no reason for deviating from F. Lines 14, 15 are much more appropriate in the Queen's mouth, as a reflection by which she is led to change her determination with regard to Oph., than as a direct warning to a queen from a subject. CLARKE: We think there is something excessively appropriate in making Hamlet's beloved friend Hor. the one who watches over and tenderly thinks for Oph. during the Prince's absence, and brings her to his mother alone. Feeling thus, we believe it to have been Shakespeare's reconsidered intention. CLARENDON: Lines 11—13, so cautiously obscure, seem better suited to an ordinary courtier than to Hor.

Her mood will needs be pitied.

_Queen._ What would she have?

_Gent._ She speaks much of her father; says she hears
There's tricks i' the world; and hems and beats her heart;

That carry but half sense; her speech is nothing,
Yet the unshaped use of it doth move
The hearers to collection; they aim at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts;

Indeed would make one think there might be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

9. _collection] Mason: To endeavor to collect some meaning from it.
9. _aim] Collier: The Qq may possibly be right, though not very likely to be so.
12. _thought] Staunton: 'Thought' is possibly a misprint, caught from the line above, for _meant, or seen, or a word of like import. Clarendon: The general sense of this ill-expressed sentence is more easily understood than paraphrased.
The speaker is afraid of committing himself to any definite statement. If he had great misfortune has happened to her.'

13. _unhappily] Warburton: Though her meaning cannot be certainly they must have been pronounced as one syllable, in whatever manner the contraction was effected. [See also Abbott, § 461.]

17-20. To...spilt] Collier: It deserves notice that these lines are marked with inverted commas in the Qq, not for the purpose of showing that the passage was a quotation, but apparently to enforce it as a maxim. It was not a very unusual practice. [See I, iii, 59, Knight's and Dyce's notes. Ed.]

18. amiss] Misfortune, disaster. For instances of its use as a substantive, see Nares, Steevens, and Concordance to Shakespeare's Poems.

19. jealousy] Clarendon: Suspicion. Guilt is so full of suspicion that it unskilfully betrays itself in fearing to be betrayed.

20. Ophelia] Hunter (ii, 258): Perhaps the 'lute' of Q, was banished when line 21 was added, which must be said running wildly up to the Queen, when the lute would have been an incumbrance. Sir Joshua Reynolds: There is no part of this play in its representation on the stage, more pathetick than this scene; which, I suppose, proceeds from the utter insensibility Oph. has to her own misfortunes. A great sensibility, or none at all, seems to produce the same effect. In the latter the audience supply what she wants, and with the former they sympathize. Coleridge: Ophelia singing. O, note the conjunction here of these two thoughts that had never subsisted in disjunction, the love of Hamlet and her filial love, with the guileless floating on the surface of her pure imagination of the cautions so lately expressed, and the fears not too delicately avowed, by her father and brother, concerning the dangers to which her honor lay exposed. This play of association is instanced in lines 67, 68.

to be the same or nearly so that was used in Shakespeare's time, and thence transmitted to us by tradition. When Drury-lane Theatre was burnt in 1812, the copy of these songs shared the fate of the whole musical library. CHAPPELL (Popular Music of the 'Olden Time,' vol. i, p. 236): 'The late W. Linley (an accomplished amateur, and brother of the highly-gifted Mrs Sheridan) collected and published 'the wild and pathetic melodies of Oph., as he remembered them to have been exquisitely sung by Mrs Forster, when she was Miss Field, and belonged to Drury-lane Theatre;' and he says 'the impression remained too strong on his mind to make him doubt the correctness of the airs, agreeably to her delivery of them.' Dr Arnold also noted them down from the singing of Mrs Jordan. Mr Ayerton has followed that version in Knight's Shakespeare. The notes of the air to this first song of Ophelia's are the same in both; but in the former it is in three-quarter time, in the latter in common time. The melody is printed in common time in The Beggar's Opera (1728), to 'You'll think, e'er many days ensue,' and in The Generous Freemason, 1731. The following is the tune; but in singing Ophelia's fragments, each line should begin on the first of the bar, and not with the note before it. In the ballad-operas it has the burden, Twang, lang, dido dee, at the end, with two additional bars of music:

Moderate time, and smoothly.

And how should I your true-love know From many another one? Oh, by his cockle hat and staff, And by his sandal shoon. Twang, lang, dido dee.

25. cockle-hat] Warburton: The description of a pilgrim. While this kind of devotion was in favor, love intrigues were carried on under this mask. Hence the old ballads and novels made pilgrimages the subjects of their plots. The cockle-shell hat was one of the essential badges of this vocation; for the chief places of devotion being beyond sea or on the coasts, the pilgrims were accustomed to put cockle-shells upon their hats, to denote the intention or performance of their devotion.

26. shoon] Delius: This form of the plural was archaic in Shakespeare's time. Elze: It also occurs in 2 Hen. VI: IV, ii, 195.

with sweet flowers! And that any one should have the folly to suppose that the ballad now sung by Oph. must apply in minute particulars to her father! Enough for her that it is a ditty about death and burial; no matter that its hero is a youthful lover,—he was cut off by a sudden fate, and so far resembled Pol. KEIGHTLEY: Though the printers often omitted the negative (as once already in this play), they rarely added it. We have, however, an instance in Much Ade, III, ii, 28, and it might be better to suppose the same to be the case here.

41. daughter] DOUCE: This is a common story among the vulgar in Gloucestershire, and is thus related: 'Our Saviour went into a baker's shop where they were baking, and asked for some bread to eat. The mistress of the shop immediately put a piece of dough into the oven to bake for him, but was reprimanded by her daughter, who, insisting that the piece of dough was too large, reduced it to a very small size. The dough, however, immediately afterwards began to swell, and presently became of a most enormous size. Whereupon the baker's daughter cried out, "Heugh, heugh, heugh," which owl-like noise probably induced our Saviour for her wickedness to transform her into that bird.' This story is often related to children, in order to deter them from such illiberal behavior to poor people. CALDECOTT: The plumage of the melancholy bird, and the color of the baker, in correspondence with her father's 'white shroud,' and probably her own habit, may have suggested, to a bewildered mind, this singular allusion. ELZE: As little did the baker's daughter expect to be turned into an owl as it occurred to my father and myself to anticipate the kind of death we should die. DOERING (p. 79): Oph. feels that she has acted towards Ham. in an equally heartless manner.

43. conceit] Imagination. See III, iv, 114. MOBERLY: The King seems to catch only the word 'daughter,' and so misunderstands.

46. STRACHEY (p. 85): If we bear in mind the notorious fact that, in the dreadful visitation of mental derangement, delicate and refined women will use language so coarse that it is difficult to guess where they can ever have even heard such words, and certain that wherever heard they would have always lain, unknown of, and innocuous, in the mind, unless the hot-bed of mental fever had quickened them for the first time into life;—if we remember this fact, and couple it with the consideration that the infant ears of the motherless Ophelia might have heard the talk and the songs of such a nurse as that of Juliet, we shall find nothing improbable, nor even unseemly, in the poor girl's songs—not only nothing to disturb our faith in the unsullied purity of her maiden mind, but nothing to cloud the bright beauty of that purity with even the slightest passing breath. [Mrs Jameson was, I think, the first to suggest that Oph. may have been sung to sleep in infancy by snatches of old ballads such as these, and Mrs Cowden Clarke has carried out the idea in her story of The Rose of Elsinore, where Botilda, the nurse, is scolded for singing this song to her infant charge.] Hudson (Shakespeare: His Life, Art, &c., Boston, 1872, ii, 281): The immodesty of some of these songs is surpassingly touching; it tells us, as nothing else could, that Oph. is utterly unconscious of what she is saying.

46. [Sings] Chappell (Popular Music of the 'Olden Time,' vol. i, p. 227): This song is found in several of the ballad-operas, such as The Cobblers' Opera (1729), The Quaker's Opera (1728), &c. In Pills to purge Melancholy (1707), ii, 44 it is printed to a song in Heywood's Rape of Lucrece, beginning, 'Arise, arise, my juggy, my puppy.' Other versions will be found under the name of 'Who list to lead a soldier's life?' and 'Lord Thomas and Fair Ellinor.'

Cheerfully.

Good morrow, 'tis St Valentine's day, All in the morning be time,

And I a maid at your window, To be your Valentine.

46. Saint Valentine's day] Halliwell: This song alludes to the custom of the first girl seen by a man on the morning of this day being considered his Valentine or true-love. The custom continued until the last century, and is graphically alluded to by Gay. The custom of the different sexes choosing themselves mates on St Valentine's day, 14th February, the names being selected either by lots or methods of divination, is of great antiquity in England. The name so drawn was the Valentine of the drawer. Douce traces the custom to the Lupercalia of Rome, during which a similar custom prevailed. There is nothing in the life of the Saint himself which can authorize such a practice, and his day was merely selected as most fit in point of time whereon to engraft a Christian festival. It was also believed that on this day birds chose their mates. PEPYS gives some quaint notices of ‘Valentines’ in his Diary under date 14th and 16th Feb., 1666, and 14th and 18th Feb., 1667.

51. dupp’d] WEDGWOOD: To do up, as off and don, to do off and do on.
52, 53. Let ... more] DOUCK found a French ballad of 1598, of which the conclusion runs thus: ‘Elle y entra pucelle, Grossette elle en sorta.’

56-63. A continuation of the same song.

56. Gis] JOHNSON: Rather, ‘By Gis;’ i.e. By St Cecily. RIDLEY: There is not the least mention of any saint whose name corresponds with this, either in the Roman Calendar, the service in Usum Sarum, or in the Benedictary of Bishop Athelwold. I believe the word to be only a corrupted abbreviation of Jesus, the letters J. H. S. being anciently all that was set down to denote that sacred name, on altars, the covers of books, &c. RITSON: Though Gis may be, and I believe is, only a contraction of Jesus, there is certainly a Saint Gislen, with whose name it corresponds. DOUCK: Ridley’s conjecture is the true one; but the corruption is not in the way he has stated. The letters I H S would not be pronounced Gis, even by those who understood them as a Greek contraction.

56. Saint Charity] STEEVENS: This is a known saint among the Roman Catholics. Spenser mentions her, Eclog. V, 255.

DYCE (ed. ii) reads muddled, as he does also in All's Well, V, ii, 4.
79. greenly] JOHNSON: Unskilfully, with greenness, without maturity of judgement.
80. hugger-mugger] STEEVENS: Sh. probably took the expression from North's Plutarch, p. 999, ed. 1631 [p. 121, ed. Skeat]: 'Antonius thinking good . . . .

91. murdering-piece] STEEVENS: 'A case shot is any kind of small bullets, nails, old iron, or the like, to put into the case, to shoot out of the ordnances or murderers; these do very mischief.'—Smith's 'Sea Grammar,' 1627. Thus, in Beau. & Fl. The Double Marriage, IV, ii, 6: 'A father's curses...like a murdering-piece, aim not at one, But all that stand within the dangerous level.' SINGER: A murdering-piece, or murder, was a small piece of artillery; in Fr. meurtrière, which took its name from the loopholes and embrasures in towers and fortifications, that were so called. 'Meurtrière, c'est un petit canonnier comme celles des tours et murailles, ainsi appelé, parceque tirant par icelle a desceu, ceux auxquels on tire sont facilement meurtri.'—Nicot. 98. lord] COLLIER (ed. 2): The (MS) would warrant us in changing 'lord' to king; perhaps the meaning of the rabble was the same, but afterwards they are represented as exclaiming 'Laertes shall be king.' Perhaps it ought to be king in both places.
100. custom] MOBERLY: As if the government were to be settled by random plebiscites at the good pleasure of the rabble.
101. word] WARBURTON: Certainly Sh. wrote word, i.e. the security that nature at less expense by reading weal, i.e. of every government. TYRWHITT: I should be rather for reading work. CAPELL, who adopted Tyrwhitt's conj., says (Notes, i, 143): Work is work of such sort as the people were about to proceed to. HEATH

(p. 544): By 'word' is here meant a declaration or proposal, referring to 'the rabble calling him lord.' TOLLET believed the sense to be 'the ratifiers and props of every word he utters.' CALDECOTT: 'Word' is term, and means appellation or title; as 'lord' and 'king;' in its more extended sense it must import 'every human establishment.' ELZE (Athenaeum, 11 Aug. '66): Read worth. As far as worth is concerned, Laer. would indeed be a proper person to be elected for this king. But the king is not chosen for his worthiness; antiquity and custom claim a share also; they are 'the idge: Fearful and self-suspicious as I always feel when I seem to see an error of judgement in Sh., yet I can not reconcile the cool reflection in these lines with the anomynousness, or the alarm, of this Gentleman or Messenger.

106. counter] Clarendon: In Holmes's Academy of Armory, Bk II, c. ix, p. 187, 'counter' is defined: 'When a hound hunteth backwards, the same way that the chase is come.'

113. calm] Corson: F5 reads better. Laer. is under the wildest excitement, with not a calm drop of blood in his veins, and when the Queen entreats, ‘Calmly, good Laertes,’ be or become calm, he replies, 'That drop of blood that calms,' that is, that grows calm, or will calm, ‘proclaims me bastard;' 'calms' and 'proclaims' are both future in force.
Even here, between the chaste unsmirched brows
Of my true mother.

King. What is the cause, Laertes,
That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?—
Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person;
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Acts little of his will.—Tell me, Laertes,
Why thou art thus incensed.—Let him go, Gertrude.—

115. unsmirched brows] Steevens: Clean, not defiled. This seems to be an allusion to a proverb often introduced in the old comedies. Thus, in The London Prodigal, 1605: ' as true as the skin between any man's brows.' Collier (ed. 2): This seems the only place where Sh. uses this word, meaning unsmirled. We have elsewhere 'smirched' and 'besmirched' for dirtied.

115. true] White: 'Between' shows that the s is manifestly needed.

118. person] Delius: It is to be inferred that the Queen throws herself between her husband and the enraged Laer. Clarendon: She clings round the latter to prevent him from striking. [See Dr Johnson's stage-direction, Textual Notes, line 112.]

119-121. There's . . . will] Coleridge: Proof, as indeed all else is, that Sh never intended us to see the King with Hamlet's eyes; though, I suspect, the man agers have long done so.

119. divinity] Boswell: In Chettle's Englandes Mourning Garment is the fol lowing anecdote of Queen Elizabeth: While her Majesty was on the river near Greenwich, a shot was fired by accident, which struck the royal barge, and hurt a waterman near her. 'The French ambassador being amazed, and all crying Treason, Treason! yet she, with an undaunted spirit, came to the open place of the barge, and bad them never feare, for if the shot were made at her, they durst not shoot againe: such majestie had her presence, and such boldnesse her heart, that she despised all feare, and was, as all princes are or should be, so full of divine fulnesse, that guiltie mortalitie durst not beholde her but with dazeled eyes.'

119. hedge] Caldecott: See Job, i, 10; and iii, 23.

120, 121. That . . . will] Staunton: This is passed by the critics without comment; but we shrewdly suspect it has undergone some depravation at the hands of transcribers or composers.

HAMLET

Speak, man.

Laer. Where's my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled with.

To hell, allegiance! vows, to the blackest devil!

Conscience and grace, to the profoundest pit!

I dare damnation. To this point I stand:

That both the worlds I give to negligence,

Let come what comes; only I'll be revenged

Most throughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world;

And for my means, I'll husband them so well,

They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

Glo. Huds. Mob. worlds Qq. world's Pope et cet.

126. theobald gives this note of Warburton's, which, not being in Warburton's own edition, was probably a MS communication: Laertes is a good character. But being in rebellion, Sh. avoids any appearance of sanctioning such conduct by putting into his mouth absurd and blasphemous sentiments, which excite nothing but horror at his actions. The jealousy of the two reigns in which Sh. wrote would not dispense with less exactness. Coleridge: Mercy on Warburton's notion of goodness! Please refer to the seventh scene of this Act. Yet I acknowledge that Sh. evidently wishes, as much as possible, to spare the character of Laer.—to break the extreme turpitude of his consent to become an agent and accomplice of the King's treachery; and to this end he re-introduces Oph. at the close of this scene to afford a probable stimulus of passion in her brother.

128. grace] Caldecott: A religious feeling, a disposition to yield obedience to the divine laws.

130. worlds] Clarendon: This world and the next. See Macb. III, ii, 16, where it means the terrestrial and the celestial worlds.

133. world] Clarendon: The reading of the Qq is perhaps right. The extravagant hyperbole, 'all the worlds,' which Laer. would thus use in reference to his former words, 'both the worlds,' is not unsuitable to his excited state of mind.

[Pope's] reading might be the meaning of the reading of Qs, in which no apostrophe is used to distinguish the genitive singular from the nominative plural. White pronounces Pope's reading 'cramped, literal, inferior.'

138. swoopstake] CLARENDON: The metaphor is from a game at cards, where the winner sweeps or 'draws' the whole stake. The meaning is somewhat confused by this admixture of metaphor. MOBERLY: Are you going to vent your rage on both friend and foe; like a gambler who insists on sweeping the stakes, whether the point is in his favor or not?

142. pelican] CALDECOTT quotes DR. SHERWEN: 'By the pelican's dropping upon its breast its lower bill to enable its young to take from its capacious pouch, lined with a fine flesh-colored skin, this appearance is, on feeding them, given. H. B. FORREST (N. & Qu., 26 June, 1869) suggests that Sh. might have drawn his knowledge on this point from Prodigorum at Ostentorum Chronicum, Basle, 1557. Moreover, in this book there is a full description of 'The Anthropophagi, and men whose heads Do grow beneath their shoulders.' RUSHTON (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 9) cites 'the Pelican, who stricketh blood out of his owne bodye to do others good.'—Euphues and his England (p. 341, ed. Arber). CLARENDON: In Rich. II: II, i, 126, and Lear, III, iv, 77, young pelicans are used as illustrations of filial impiety.

sent her most precious senses after the object of her inflamed affection. WARBURTON: The cause of Ophelia's madness was grief, occasioned by the violence of her natural affection for her murdered father; her brother, therefore, with great force of expression, says: 'Nature is*fal'n* in love, and where 'tis*fal'n.' [Thus Warburton's text.] To distinguish the passion of natural affection from the passion of love between the two sexes, i.e. Nature, or natural affection is*fal'n* in love. JOHNSON: These lines might have been omitted in the Folio without great loss, for they are obscure and affected; but, I think, they require no emendation. Love (says Laertes) is the passion by which nature is most exalted and refined; and as substances, refined and subtilised, easily obey any impulse, or follow any attraction, some part of nature, so purified and refined, flies oft on the attracting object, after the thing it loves. CLARENDON: 'Fine' seems to mean 'delicately tender,' and 'instance' 'proof' or 'example.' 'The thing it loves' is here Polonius; the 'precious instance,' Ophelia's natural soundness of mind. Her sanity has followed her father to the grave. COLLIER (ed. 2): Lines 157-159 are struck through with a pen in the (MS), probably because they were not understood.

Coll., Cambridge, has made the following note: 'Oph. gives the song without the Burthen first, and then she instructs them, "You must sing a-down a-down, and you (speaking to another) call him a-down-a."

167. _wheel] Warburton:_ We should read _weal_. She is now rambling on the ballad of the steward and his lord's daughter; and in these words speaks of the state he assumed. _Heath:_ Possibly by 'wheel' is here meant the burden of the ballad. _Dyce_ (Gloss.) says that 'most critics seem now to agree with Steevens [sic] in thus referring it to the burden or refrain; but Clarendon asserts that no satisfactory example has been found of the word in this sense. _Steevens_ cites a very opposite illustration 'from memory, from a book of which' he could not recollect the exact title or date;' unfortunately when Steevens does not adduce line, page, and title, his illustrations are to be received with caution; his wit was too ready at a pinch, and the simple reference to a 'black-letter quarto in my possession' was convenient, much like Sir Walter Scott's _Old Play._ The illustration in question (which has been repeated by several edd. since his day) is as follows: 'The song was accounted a good one, though it was not moche graced by the wheele, which in no wise accorded with the subject-matter thereof.' A conclusive quotation, if—. _Steevens_ adds that 'Rota' is the ancient musical term in Latin for the burden of a song. _Johnson_ suggests: 'perhaps the lady stolen by the steward was reduced to spin!' _Malone_ divests this suggestion of its tragic element by supposing that the wheel is here used in its ordinary sense, and that these words refer to the occupation of the girl who is supposed to sing the song alluded to by Oph. _Staunton_ says it was, perhaps, the practice on the old stage for Oph. to play the 'wheel,' i.e. the refrain, upon her lute before these words. [If 'wheel' ever meant _refrain_, the meaning apparently had become obsolete when F was printed. Ed.]

168. _steward] Collier:_ No such ballad is known. _Moorely:_ By the false steward stealing his master's daughter she may mean that the rollicking chorus, instead of aiding the sense, steals away all its pathos and dirge-like character.

169. _matter] See II, ii, 95; and Lear, IV, vi, 178.

The mind of Oph. is thrown off its poise by the shock which she had received; she thinks of marriage: with that comes the idea of rosemary, the sweet-scented rosemary, and she addresses him who should have been the bridgroom, Ham. himself, as her 'love.' She then feels her disappointment. Ham. is not there, and she turns to another flower wrought up in her wild attire, pansies, as more fitting her condition, a flower connected with melancholy, then often called thought, and taking its name from it. 'There's a daisy; I would give you some violets, but,' &c. When the mind is unsettled, it is usual for some idea to recur which has been introduced at a critical period of the person's life. Now, when Laer. was warning Oph. against encouraging the attentions of Ham., he urged her to consider his trifling but as 'A violet in the youth of primy nature.' These words had remained imprinted on her mind, associated with the idea of Ham. and the idea of her brother, and they now recur to her memory when she again converses with her brother on the same unhappy subject. The violets withered when her father died. When Ham. had slain Pol. there was a final obstacle interposed to their union. _Staunton:_ There is method in poor Ophelia's distribution. She presents to each the herb popularly appropriate to his age or disposition. To Laer., whom in her distraction she probably confounds with her lover, she gives 'rosemary' as an emblem of his faithful remembrance; and 'pansies' to denote love's 'thoughts' or 'troubles.'

_DELIUS:_ Probably these flowers existed only in Ophelia's fantasy, and there was no distribution of real flowers to the persons present.

171. _pansies] Johnson: 'For thoughts, because of its name, _penestes_.' In N. & Qu., 22 Oct. 1864, Fabius Oxoniensis gives a number of the names by which this flower is known among rusticus and old writers; see also Beisly (Sh. Garden, p. 156).

173. _document] Edinburgh Review (Shakespearean Glossaries, July, 1869): This word is here used in its earlier and etymological sense of instruction, lesson, teaching. This early signification is well illustrated in the _Fairy Queen_ [i, 10, 19—Clarendon], 'her sacred booke . . . . She unto him disclosed every whit, And heavenly documents thereof did preach.' The word was habitually used in this sense in Shakespeare's day, but has now wholly lost its primitive signification, and is restricted to its secondary sense of written precepts, instructions, and evidences. _Clarendon:_ Cotgrave gives 'Document: m. A document, precept; instruction, admonition; experiment, example.'

175. _fennel] Malone: Oph. gives her fennel and columbines to the King. In A Handsfull of Pleasant Delites, 1584, the former is thus mentioned: 'Fennel is for flatterers,' &c. See also Florio: Dare finocchio, to give fennell . . . . to flatter, to rue for you; and here's some for me; we may call it herb 176 of grace o' Sundays; oh, you must wear your rue with a

177. Sundays] Sondaes QqQqQq,

dissemble. NARES: This was generally considered an inflammatory herb, and was certainly emblematic of flattery. [Several instances are given.] STAUNTON: For the King she has 'fennel,' signifying 'flattery' and 'lust;' and 'columbines,' which marked ingratitude. DYCE (Gloss.): We may certainly suppose that she offers the King 'flattery,' though we do not agree with Staunton in supposing that here fennel signifies 'lust' also. BRIELY (p. 157) cites Holland's Pliny [p. 77, ed. 1635]: 'Fennel hath a singular property to mundifie our sight, and take away the filme or web that ouercasteth and dimmeth our eyes.' This property is noticed by most of our early writers on plants, and it is in reference to this quality that Oph. presents it to the King to clear his sight, just as the rosemary was given to Laer. to aid his memory.

175. columbines] STEEVENS: In All Fools, by Chapman, 1605: 'a columbine? No; that thankless flower fits not my garden.'—II, i. Gerard and other herbalists impute few, if any, virtues to them; and they may therefore be styled thankless, because they appear to make no grateful return for their creation. STEPHEN] W[ESTON]: Columbine was an emblem of cuckoldom on account of the horns of its nectaria, which are remarkable in this plant. HOLT WHITE: It was also emblematic of forsaken lovers: 'The columbine in tawny often taken Is then ascribed to such as are forsaken.'—Brown's Britannia's Pastoral, b. i, song ii, 1613. DYCE (Gloss.): But here Oph. is not assigning the columbine to herself, and, except herself, there is no 'love-lorn' person present.

176, 177. rue . . . Sundays] WARBURTON: 'The reason why 'rue' was called 'herb of grace' is because that herb was a principal ingredient in the potion which the Romish priests used to force the possessed to swallow when they exorcised them. These exorcisms being performed generally on a Sunday, in church before the whole congregation, is the reason why she says we call it 'herb of grace' o' Sundays.' [DYCE says Warburton was only repeating what he had read in the works of a great divine,—Jeremy Taylor; see TODD post.] STEEVENS: I believe there is a quibble meant in this passage; 'rue' ancienfly signifying the same as ruth, i.e. sorrow. Oph. gives the Queen some, and keeps a proportion of it for herself. There is the same kind of play with the same word in Rich. II: III, iv, 104. 'Herb of grace' is one of the titles which Tucca gives to William Rufus, in Decker's Satiromastix. I suppose the first syllable of the surname Rufus introduced the quibble. HENLEY: The following passage from Greene's Quip for an Upstart Courtier will furnish the best reason for calling rue herb of grace o' Sundays: '—some of them smil'd and said, Rue was called Herbegrace, which, though they scorned in their youth, they might wear in their age, and that it was never too late to say Miserere.' MALONE: 'Herb of grace' was not the Sunday name, but the every-day name of 'rue.' In the common dictionaries of Shakespeare's time it is called 'herb of grace.' See Florio s. v. rula, and Cotgrave s. v. rue. There is no ground, therefore, for sup-difference. There's a daisy; I would give you some violets, but they withered all when my father died; they say he made a good end,— posing with Warburton that 'rue' was called 'herb of grace' from its being used in exorcisms performed in churches on Sundays. Oph. only means, I think, that the Queen may with peculiar propriety on Sundays, when she solicits pardon for that crime which she has so much occasion to rue and repent of, call her 'rue' 'herb of grace.' After having given the Queen 'rue,' to remind her of the sorrow and contrition she ought to feel for her incestuous marriage, Oph. tells her she may wear it with a difference, to distinguish it from that worn by Oph. herself; because her tears flowed from the loss of a father, those of the Queen ought to flow for her guilt. Todd (sp. Caldecott) cites Jeremy Taylor's A Diatribe from Popery, Part I, ch. ii, sect. ix: 'They [the Romish exorcists] are to try the devil by holy water, incense, sulphur, rue; which from thence, as we suppose, came to be called herb of grace.' Caldecott cites a passage from Edward Alleyn's letters [Var. 1821, vol. xxi, p. 390, and Sh. Soc. vol. ix, p. 26], which seems to imply that 'herb of grace' and 'rue' were different plants: 'Every evening' [Alleyn is telling his wife, whom he calls 'good sweete mouse,' to take precautions against the plague raging that year, 1593, in London] 'throwe water before your dore and in your bake sid, and have in your windowes good store of reue and herb of grace.' That this 'herb of grace' was wormwood Malone shows by referring to the reply from Alleyn's parents to this letter: 'for your good counsell . . . . we all thanck you, which wasse for keeping of our howse cleane . . . . and strainge our windowes with wormwode and rewe.' —Sh. Soc. vol. ix, p. 30.

178. difference] Steevens: This seems to refer to the rules of heraldry, where the younger brothers of a family bear the same arms with a difference, or mark of distinction. So, in Holinshed's Reign of King Richard II, p. 443: '—because he was the youngest of the Spencers, he bare a border gules for a difference.' There may, however, be somewhat more implied here than is expressed. You, madam (says Oph. to the Queen), may call your rue by its Sunday name, herb of grace, and so wear it with a difference to distinguish it from mine, which can never be anything but merely rue, i.e. sorrow. Caldecott: Between the ruth and wretchedness of guilt, and the ruth and sorrows of misfortune, it would be no difficult matter to distinguish. Skeat (N. & Qu., 25 Dec. 1869): There is no difficulty here if we do not force the words into some heraldic phrase. It merely means this: I offer you rue, which has two meanings; it is sometimes called herb of grace, and in that sense I take some for myself; but with a slight difference of spelling it means ruth, and in that respect it will do for you. This explanation is not mine,—it is Shakespeare's own; see Ric. II: III, iv, 105, 106. [A discussion on the meaning of this phrase is also to be found in Edin. Rev. July, 1869; N. & Qu. 25 Sept. 1869; 23 Oct. 1869, and 8 Jan. 1870.]

178. daisy] Hemley: Greene, in his Quip for an Upstart Courtier, has explained the significance of this flower: '—Next they grew the dissembling daisie, to warne such light-of-love wenches not to trust every faire promise that such amorous bache-

SINGER: Hamlet is the name of a foolish footman in the same scene. I know not why this should have been considered an attack on Sh.; it was the usual license of comedy to sport with everything serious and even sacred. Hamlet Travestie may as well be called an invidious attack on Sh.

Jesu Amanit, 1554, speaking first of the funeral of Chaucer, and then of Gower, says: '——he lieth buried in the monasterie of Seynt Peter's at Westminster, &c. On whose soules and all christen, Jesu have mercie.' Moberly: So, with this most touching prayer, Oph. goes to meet her death. It displays admirably her simple and loving spirit, and seems to be a protest beforehand against the hard-hearted law which hinders her having the full Christian burial-rites.

194. of] For instances of 'of' used for on, see Abbott, § 175 and § 181.

195. Jennens: 'Do you see this?' is spoken to the King; and 'O God!' is only an exclamation expressing the anguish of Laertes's mind on the sight of his sister's frenzy. [So in Jennens's text. Ed.]

196. commune] Steevens: To common of F, is to 'commune,' which, pronounced as anciently spel, is still in frequent provincial use. So, in The Last Voyage of Captaine Frobisher, by Dionys Settle, bl. i., 1577: 'Our Generall, repayred with the ship boat to common or sign with them.' Again, in Holinshed's account of Jack Cade's insurrection: '——to whom were sent from the king the archbishop, &c., to common with him of his griefs and requests.' Boswell: Surely the word common in F, means, I must be allowed to participate in your grief, to feel in common with you. [Grant White, in his excellent Sh. Scholar, p. 421, was beguiled by the 'homely strength' of the F, text into approval of Boswell's interpretation of it, much to Dyce's 'surprise,' who pronounced it 'most erroneous'; the two words, common and 'commune,' are mere variations in spelling of the same word; they were both accented alike, on the first syllable,—as Grant White afterwards remarked in his edition. And Hudson says Milton so accents 'commune,' and so also even Wordsworth. Ed.]

the close of the interview with his mother: 'O 'tis most sweet When in one line two crafts directly meet.'—If the word crafts had its present maritime significance in Shakespeare's time, the pun alone is conclusive of a pre-arranged capture. How arranged is neither here nor there; but opportunities of chartering a free cruiser could not have been wanting to a prince of Denmark, and, what is more significant, the fleet of Fortinbras was then in port at Elsinor. There is an understanding, just ever so vaguely glanced at, between the two young princes. But the following lines admit of but one interpretation: "Let it work; For 'tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petar; and 't shall go hard But I will DELVE ONE YARD BELOW THEIR MINES AND BLOW THEM AT THE MOON!" One would think it required a miraculous allowance of critical obtuseness to ignore a counterplot so strikingly pre-announced. . . . To make assurance doubly sure, comes the letter to Hor., "In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They dealt with me like thieves of mercy; but they knew what they did." Can circumstantial proof go farther? Could any twelve men of sense, on such a record, acquit Ham. of being an accessory before, as well as after the fact? [See Snider, Appendix, Vol. II, p. 183.]

28. Clarke: This simple yet strong conclusion to his sedate but most earnest letter to his bosom-friend might, we think, fully serve to denote Hamlet's perfect sanity. Madmen do not write in a style thus condensed and pertinent; if they are warm they are violent, if they are fervent they are excited; but here is warmth of friendship with staid expression, fervour of feeling with sobriety of assurance.
Come, I will make you way for these your letters;

20. spring] Johnson: This simile is neither very seasonable in the deep interest of this conversation, nor very accurately applied. If the spring had changed base metals to gold, the thought had been more proper. Reed: The allusion is to the qualities of the dropping-well at Knaresborough, in Yorkshire. Camden (1590, p. 564) thus mentions it: 'Sub quo fons est in quem ex impenitentibus rapibus aque guttatis distillator, unde Dropping Well vocatur, in quem quicquid ligni immittitur, lapideo cortice brevi obduci et lapidescere observatum est.' 'gyves,' but in 'graces.' How can corporeal 'gyves' be converted into incorporeal, abstract 'graces'? That is more than even the well at Knaresborough could do.
An abstract noun in this connection ruins the whole metaphor, and is illogical.
If we substitute some abstract noun for 'gyves,' while restoring logical propriety, we deprive the simile of all significant clearness, force, and depth, and to introduce the wonder-working spring in order to compare together two abstract qualities would be pointless, and assuredly not in accordance with Shakespeare's genius and style. Read, therefore: graves. Graves, now spelled 'greaves,' is found also in 2 Hen. IV: IV, iv, 50, where, as here, something mean becomes ennobled. For the spelling, compare 'thraues,' instead of 'thraues' (Chapman's Iliad, xi, 477); and 'stale,' instead of 'steale or stele' (Ib. iv, 173). STRATMANN praises this emendation of Elise's as judicious.

22. Jennens finds the reading of the Ff so unnatural and impossible that he adopts that of Q, Q, reading so love'd, arm'd, and paraphrases, 'Too slightly timbered for one so loved and armed with the affections and veneration of the people.' The armes of Q are put for the person arm'd, and the love applied to them which is meant for him. In both these readings we have the idea of a suit of armor reverberating an arrow back to its bow, which is not only possible, but just. STEVENS: The reading of the Ff, however, is supported by Ascham's Toxophilus: 'Weake bowes, and lyghte shaftes can not stonde in a rough wynde.' [p. 151, ed. Arber.]

25. 26. have . . . driven] ABOTT, § 425: Here note that though the first line could be re-transposed, and Laer. could naturally say, 'I have lost a father,' on the other hand he could not say, 'I have driven a sister,' without completely changing the sense. 'Have' is here used in its original sense, and is equivalent to 'I find.' When 'have' is thus used without any notion of action, it is separated from the participle passive. See I, ii, 215; III, iii, 38.

27. praises] JOHNSON: If I may praise what has been, but is now to be found no more.

28. on mount] CALDECOTT: On the highest ground, in the fullest presence of the age, to give a general challenge in support of her excellence. I think Caldecott failed to see that 'of all the age' qualifies 'challenger.' Her worth challenged dance, at Presburg, he unsheathes the ancient sword of state, and shaking it towards North, South, East, and West, challenges the four corners of the world to dispute his rights.

30. sleeps] See I, i, 173. DYCSTE quotes from Phaer’s Virgil, Æneid, ii: ‘The towne ... in sleepees [the original somme] and drinking drownd;’ and refers to 2 Hen. IV: IV, v, 69, where he also reads ‘sleeps.’

59. As ... otherwise] DELIUS: We should expect ‘How should it not be so?’
Sh. is elsewhere inexact in repeating and in omitting the negative. KEIGHTLEY (Exposer, p. 295): It is manifest that but or not has been omitted. [Keightley reads ‘should it but’ in his text.] CLARENDON: Perhaps the first clause refers to Hamlet’s return, the second to Laertes’ feelings. MARSHALL (p. 197): If the ‘should’ were italicised we might make sense of it, thus: ‘If it be so’—(i.e., if Ham. has come back because, on consideration, he did not choose to go to England)—‘As how should it be so?’ (i.e., how should there be any question about it being so?)— ‘How (could it be) otherwise?’ I admit that in this case we should expect ‘if’
to be repeated.

60. Will ... me?] WHITE: The most un-Shakespearian want of accord between the rhythm and the sense of this hemistich,—the accent being thrown upon ‘by’ instead of ‘me,’—warrants the opinion that the intelligent correction in the Folio is by authority. [It is to be borne in mind that White supposes ‘ruled’ is to be pronounced as a dissyllable. In his text he prints ‘ruil’d,’ and, following the Ff, omits ‘Ay, my lord.’ Ed.]

at any lure?’—Hinde’s Eliosto Libidinosa, 1606. DYER (Gloss.) : Applied to a hawk when she forsakes her proper game and follows some other of inferior kind that crosses her in her flight. CLARENDON: Compare Twelfth Night, II, v, 124, and No more to undertake it, I will work him
To an exploit now ripe in my device,
Under the which he shall not choose but fall;
And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe;
But even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident.

III, i. 71. The use of the word is not quite the same here, because the voyage was Hamlet's 'proper game,' which he abandons. COLLIERS (ed. 1): 'Checking at' was doubtless introduced in the Ff as a conjectural emendation. [Not repeated in Collier's ed. 2.] DVCR: The Ff reading is much more in Shakespeare's manner than liking not.

68. _uncharge_] CALDECOTT: Acquit of blame. CLARENDON: The word is probably coined by Sh. for the nonce.

[MOBERLY: This emendation gives better sense.] JOHNSON: 'Importing' here may be not inferring by logical consequence, but producing by physical effect. A young man regards show in his dress, an old man, health. MALONE: 'Importing health' means denoting an attention to health. STEEVENS: 'Importing' may only signify, implying, denoting. Malone's explanation may be the true one. CLARENDOン adopts Malone's explanation. [See Rom. & Jul. I, i, 86. May not this be an instance of what CORSON (Cornell Rev. Nov. 1876) calls respective construction, and 'health' refer to 'careless livery,' and 'graveness' to 'sables' and 'weeds'? Compare III, i, 151: 'The courtier's, scholar's, soldier's, eye, tongue, sword;' also MACB, I, iii, 60: 'speak thou to me who neither beg nor fear your favour nor your hate;' Wint. Tale, III, ii, 164: 'though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him.' CLARENDOン: Compare Bacon, Essay xi, p. 40: 'In evil the best condition is not to will, the second not to can.'

93. Lamond] MALONE: Sh. wrote, I suspect, Lamode. See lines 94, 95, where he is spoken of as 'the brooch and gem of all the nation.' CLARENDON: The name appears to have been altogether fictitious. C. ELLIOT BROWNE (Athenaum, 29 July, 1876): It is not impossible that this is an allusion to Pietro Monte (in a Gallicized form), the famous cavalier and swordsman, who is mentioned by Castiglione ('Il Cortegiano,' b. i) as the instructor of Louis the Seventh's Master of Horse. In the English translation he is called 'Peter Mount.' [I regret that these valuable Notes on Shakespeare's Names reached me too late to be inserted in due place in the commentary under the first appearance of each character. They will be found, however, in the Appendix, Vol. II, p. 241. Ed.]

94. brooch] NARES: An ornamental buckle, pin, or loop. From the French broche, a spit. It is frequently mentioned as an ornamental worn in the hat.

96. confession] DELIUS: Here used, because Lamond would not willingly acknowledge the superiority of Laer. over the French in the art of fighting.

98. defence] JOHNSON: That is, in the science of defence.

101. scrimers] JOHNSON: Fencers. MALONE: From escrimeur, Fr. a fencer. COLLIER (ed. 2): It is not used by any other poet. WHITE: The Qq give a mere ignorant printing of th' escrimeurs [which White adopts in his text], helped, perhaps, by an accidental putting of the space on the wrong side of the e. No such word as scrimers has been met with in the books on fencing, or anywhere else.

_King._ Laertes, was your father dear to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

_Laer._ Why ask you this?

_King._ Not that I think you did not love your father;
But that I know, love is begun by time,
And that I see, in passages of proof,
Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.

envenom'? If the latter, read _your_ envy.' _Coleridge:_ Note how the King first awakens Laertes's vanity by praising the reporter, and then gratifies it by the report itself, and finally points it by these lines.

111. _Walker_ (Crit. iii, 270): Here, and in III, iii, 57, and IV, v, 119, _Claudius_, like the Ghost, shows something of Hamlet's philosophising turn.

112. _begun by time_] _Johnson:_ The meaning may be, _love_ is not innate in us, and co-essential to our nature, but begins at a certain time from some external cause, and being always subject to the operations of time, suffers change and diminution.

_M. Mason:_ The King reasons thus:—'I do not suspect that you did not love your father; but I know that time abates the force of affection.' I therefore suspect that we ought to read: 'love is begone by time.' I suppose that Sh. places the syllable _be_ before _gone_, as we say _be-paint, be-spatter, be-think, _&c., or possibly we should read 'by-gone.' _Bailey_ (ii, 14): The dominant idea of the speech is that love is abated by time. Read 'love is begone by time,' an expression which exactly conveys the sense required, while the change requisite for perverting it into the received text is slight. Compare _Rich. III:_ I, iii, 222; _Tros. & Cres. IV, v, 293.

112. _by time_] _Seymour_ (ii, 197): Read _betime._ The King means, 'love begins at an early period of life, but as our affections ripen this affection suffers abatement.' _Keightley:_ I cannot make any good sense out of this. I suspect that 'time' may be owing to the same word lower down. The love spoken of seems to be that of children for parents, and possibly the word was _childhood, birth._

113. _proof_] _Johnson:_ In transactions of daily experience. _Clarendon:_ Circumstances which prove that time abates love. Compare II, i, 38.

114. _fire_] For other instances of the lengthened pronunciation of this word, see _Walker, Verse_ 144; _Abbott_, § 480.

118. plurisy] Warburton: I would believe, for the honor of Sh., that he wrote plethory. But I observe the dramatic writers of that time frequently call a fulness of blood a plurisy, as if it came not from πλησία, but from plus, pluris. [This emendation Warburton communicated by letter to Theobald, who replied that it had also occurred to him, but that he was doubtful of it, partly from the accentual syllable falling so wrong in the verse, the o being long] [here Theobald's Greek misled him], and partly because Sh. might have mistaken the nature of pleurisy, as Beau & Fl. seem to have done: 'those too many excellenties, that feed Your pride, turn t a pleurisy.'—Custom of the Country [II, i, p. 417, ed. Dyce]. In this edition Theobald added: 'thou grand decider . . . that heal'st The earth when it is sick, and cur'st the world O' the pleurisy of people.'—Two Noble Kinsmen [V, i, p. 417, ed. Dyce].
Tollet, in the Var. 1821, cites: Mascal's Treatise on Cattle, 1662, p. 187, 'Against the blood, or plurisie of blood. The disease of blood is, some young horses will feed, and being fat will increase blood, and so grow to a plurisie, and die.' Malone cites: 'Must your hot itch and plurisy of lust . . . be fed Up to a surfeit.'—Tis Pity She's a Whore, IV, iii [Ford's Works, p. 177, ed. Dyce]. Other instances are given by M. Mason and Nares, in all of which the word is spelled 'pleurisy,' and means a surfeit, a plethory. Whence Nares affirms that it means 'a plethora or redundancy of blood. Not the same as pleurisy, but derived from plus, pluris, mere.' And Nares is followed in the derivation from plus, pluris, by Dyce, Collier, Staunton, White, and Hudson. Gifford also explains: 'Thy plurisy of goodness is thy ill' (Massinger's Unnatural Combat, IV, i, p. 196, ed. Gifford) by
'th superabundance of goodness: the thought is from Sh., and cites the present passage from Hamlet. Coleridge, in his Notes, says, 'I rather think that Sh. meant pleurisy, but involved in it the thought of plethora, as supposing pleurisy to arise from too much blood; otherwise I can not explain this 'should' is like a spendthrift sigh That hurts by easing.' In a stitch in the side every one must have heaved a sigh that "hurt by easing." Since writing the above I feel confirmed that "pleurisy" is the right word; for I find that in the old medical dictionaries the pleurisy is often called the "plethory." In fine, Sh. and the early dramatists were misled by the sound into supposing that pleurisy was the same as plethory, and it was accordingly spelled 'pleurisy,' as indicating the symptoms implied in its supposed derivation from plus, pluris. It is better to retain that spelling, although there is no disease, I believe, so named, or rather so spelled, at present. Ed.]

120. should ... would] See I, v, 32; III, iii, 75; Macb. I, v, 19, and III, vi, 19.

128. spendthrift sigh] Warburton: This nonsense should be read 'a spendthrift's sigh,' i.e. though a spendthrift's entering into bonds or mortgages gives him a present relief from his straits, yet it ends in much greater distresses. Heath: This refers to a very idle opinion, still prevalent among the common people, that every sigh draws drops of blood from the heart and tends to shorten life. Caldecott cites Dr Sherwen: To have conceived, previous to the discovery of the circulation of the blood, that sighing sucked the blood, was an idea natural enough; for after, or rather during, a deep sigh the blood flows more freely through the pulmonary artery and its ramifications in the different lobes of the lungs; and it might have appeared to the old physiologists to be thus drawn away from the heart and the general mass into the lungs. How it got back again into the heart, they did not know. Clarendon: The meaning is that the mere recognition of a duty without the will to perform it, while it satisfies for a moment, enfeebles the moral nature. We have the same notion of sighs wasting the vital powers in 2 Hen. VI: III, ii, 63; Mid. N. D., III, ii, 97. [See Rom. & Jul. III, v, 58.] Moberly: He who vainly acknowledges that he 'should' have done a thing is like a spendthrift sighing for his squandered estate.

128. sanctuarize] Clarendon: This verb is probably invented by Sh. No place should protect murder (such as that which Ham. has perpetrated) from punishment. Compare Rich. III: III, i, 42; Cor. I, i, 19.
Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,
Will you do this, keep close within your chamber.

134. unbated] Pope (ed. 2): Not blunted, as foils are. Or, as one edition has it, unbailed or overenemmed. [No edition has yet been found with this reading. Two years before Pope's second edition was published in 1728, Theobald, in his Shak. Restored, p. 119, in a note on this passage had conjectured imbailed, and also on the same page suggested 'imbailed' and environ'd' for 'unbated and environ'd,' V, ii, 304. Hence arose, probably, Pope's error. Theobald, in the Appendix, p. 192, withdrew these conjectures, and supposes that 'unbated' may here mean unbated, or not robbed of its point; nor, he adds, can the conjecture hold in the second passage without tautology, because 'environ'd' signifies the same as 'imbailed.' Ed.] STEEVENS: In North's Plutarch it is said of one of the Metelli, that he shewed the people the cruel fight of fencers at unbated swords.' Bacon's Advancement of Learning, ii. 10, § 2: 'Nay, we see the weakness and credulity of men is such, as they will often prefer a mountebank or witch before a learned physician.' In Jonson's Fox, Volpone, disguised as a mountebank, has a multitude of medicines to sell. In Italian he is called ciarlatano, whence the French ciarlatan, for which among others Cotgrave gives as equivalents, 'A Mountebane, a couening drug-seller, a prating quack-saler.'

143. simples] Clarendon: Herbs, so-called as being the simple ingredients of

162. stuck] BLACKSTONE: Read tuck, a common name for a rapier. MALONE: ‘Stuck,’ a term of the fencing-school, means thrust. DYCE (Gloss.): More properly stock, an abbreviation of stoccado. WHITE speaks of an ‘old copy’ which reads, ‘your venom’d trick.’ [I have been unable to find any old copy which so reads. Ed.]

163. noise] JENNINS finds great significance in these words, as an expression of the King’s guilt, and fear of being overheard.

165. STEEVES: Compare Per. I, iv, 63. Ritson calls attention to a similar thought in Locrine, one of the Spurious Plays, first published in 1595. Sabren drowns herself, and Queen Gwendoline exclaims: ‘One mischief follows another’s neck.’ [So it reads in the last column of the last page of F2.]

168. THOMAS CAMPBELL (?) (Blackwood’s Maga. March, 1833): The Queen was affected after a fashion by the picturesque mode of Ophelia’s death, and takes more pleasure in describing it than any one who really had a heart. Gertrude was a gossip—and she is gross even in her grief.

168. willow] HUNTER (ii, 261): She resorted to the willow ‘to make her a garland, as being forsaken,’ as Benedick says of the Count.

168. aslant] COLLIER: Ascall has nearly the same meaning as ‘aslan.’ BEISLEY (p. 159): This willow, the Salix alba, grows on the banks of most of our small streams, particularly the Avon, near Stratford, and from the looseness of the soil the trees partly lose their hold, and bend ‘aslan’ over the stream.

169. hoar] CLARKE: Willow leaves are green on the upper side, but silvery-grey, or hoary, on the under side, which it shows in the glassy stream. CLARENDON: Compare Virgil, Georgic, ii, 13: ‘Glaucan canentia fronde salicia.’ LOWELL (Among My Books, p. 183): Sh. understood perfectly the charm of indirectness, of making his readers seem to discover for themselves what he means to show them. make it a mere fact of observation by bluntly saying so, but makes it picturesquely reveal itself to us as it might in Nature.

170. come] JENNENS interprets the Qq: With the willow she made a garland, and stuck flowers in it. KNIGHT says: To 'make,' of the Qq, here means to 'come,' to 'make way,' to 'proceed.'

171. FARREN (Mania and Madness, &c., p. 62): This line is an exquisite specimen of emblematic or picture-writing. The 'crow-flowers,' according to Parkinson, was called The fayre Mayde of France; the 'long purples' are dead men's fingers; the 'daisy' imports pure virginity or spring of life, as being itself the virgin bloom of the year. The order runs thus, with the meaning of each flower beneath:

CROW-FLOWERS, NETTLES, DAISIES, LONG PURPLES.

Fayre Mayde { stung to virgin cold hand }
{ the quick, bloom of death. }

'A fair maid stung to the quick, her virgin bloom under the cold hand of death.' BRISLEY (p. 159): 'Crow-flowers' are the bulbous croustoot, Ranunculus bulbosus, and the meadow croustoot, R. acris. The most common 'nettles' which blossom early are the white dead-nettle, Lamium album, and the purple dead-nettle, L. purpureum. 'Daisy,' Bellis perennis; the only British species, blossoms all the year, and is one of the earliest flowers of spring.

171. long purples] STEVENS: In Lyte's Herbal, 1578, its various names, too gross for repetition, are preserved. MALONE: One of the grosser names Gertrude had a particular reason to avoid,—the rampant widow. BRISLEY (p. 160): This is the early purple orchis, Orchis mascula, which blossoms in April and May. The 'cold maids' mistook one of the other orchids, having palmated roots, for 'long purples.' The spotted palmate orchis, Orchis maculata, and the marth orchis, O. latifolia, have palmated roots, and are called 'dead men's fingers,' which they somewhat resemble. [See also The Garden, 19 Sept. 1874.]

173. cold] DELIUS: In opposition to 'liberal.'

And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up;
Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes,

Or like a creature native and induced

Till that her garments, heavy with their drink, Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

Lacr. Alas, then, is she drown'd?

Caldecott: Thus: 'conducted into the great hall of the gods, Mercury sprinkled me with water, which made me capable of their divine presence.'—Greene's Orpharion, 1599.
181. induced] Mason: We should read either indued or indulued. Sh. seems to have forgotten himself in this scene, as there is not a single circumstance in this relation which implies that Oph. had drowned herself intentionally. Malone: 'Indued' is clothed, endowed, or furnished with properties suited to the element of water. Our old writers used indued and endow'd indiscriminately.

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.

Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor Ophelia, know what passed in the mind of Oph. when she placed herself in so perilous a situation. After the facts had been weighed and considered, the priest in the next Act pronounces that her death was doubtful. Seymour (ii, 197): As the Queen seems to give this description from ocular knowledge, it may be asked why, apprised as she was of Ophelia's distraction, she did not take steps to prevent the fatal catastrophe, especially as there was so fair an opportunity of saving her while she was, by her clothes, borne 'mermaidlike-up,' and the Queen was at leisure to hear her 'chanting old tunes.' T. C. [Thomas Campbell?] (Blackwood's Maga., Feb. 1818, p. 511): Perhaps this description by the Queen is poetical rather than dramatic; but its exquisite beauty prevails, and Oph., dying and dead, is still the same Oph. that first won our love. Perhaps the very forgetfulness of her throughout the remainder of the play, leaves the soul at full liberty to dream of the departed. She has passed away from the earth like a beautiful air,—a delightful dream. There would have been no place for her in the agitation and tempest of the final catastrophe. We are satisfied that she is in her grave. And in place of beholding her involved in the shocking troubles of the closing scene, we remember that her heart lies at rest, and the remembrance is like the returning voice of melancholy music. HUDSON: This passage is deservedly celebrated, and aptly illustrates the Poet's power of making the description of a thing better than the thing itself, by giving us his eyes to see it with. CLARENDON: This speech of the Queen is certainly unworthy of its author and of the occasion. The enumeration of plants is quite as unsuitable to so tragic a scene as the description of the Dover cliff, in Lear, IV, vi, 11–24. Besides, there was no one by to witness the death of Oph., else she would have been rescued.

185. drown'd?] CORSON: It would appear from the Queen's reply that Laeret's speech must have been meant to be interrogative. If exclamation, the iteration thereupon of the Queen, 'Drown'd, drown'd,' is almost ludicrous, and makes one feel that the poor girl has had indeed, as Laer. says in the next speech, 'too much of water.'

186. drown'd] WARBURTON: Beau. & Fl. ridicule this passage: 'I will run mad first, and if that get not pity, I'll drown myself to a most dismal ditty.'—The Scornfull Lady, III, ii, p. 68, ed. Dyce. ELZE finds another allusion to this passage in the same play of The Scornfull Lady, II, iii, p. 41: 'Drown'd, drown'd at sea.' [But this allusion is doubtful; the plot hinges on the supposed drowning at sea of the hero, and such a phrase could hardly be avoided. There are, however, undoubtedly other allusions to Hamlet elsewhere in the play. Ed.]

189. trick] CALDECOTT: Our habit, a property that makes a part of us. CLARENDON: See All's Well, III, ii, 9; Love's Lab. V, ii, 416. [Lear, IV, vi, 105.]

193. douts] CALDECOTT: That is, does out, extinguishes. COLLiER: Shakespeare's word may have been 'douts,' but drowns seems preferable. STRATMANN: If doubts is equivalent to 'douts,' it suits the context better than drowns.

193. COLERIDGE: That Laer. might be excused in some degree for not cooling, the Act concludes with the affecting death of Oph.,—who in the beginning lay like a little projection of land into a lake or stream, covered with spray-flowers, quietly reflected in the quiet waters, but at length is undermined or loosened, and becomes a fairy isle, and after a brief vagrancy sinks almost without an eddy.

SCENE I.] SCHLEICII (ii, 194): The only circumstance from which this piece might be found less theatrical than other tragedies of Sh. is, that in the last scenes the main action either stands still or appears to retrograde. This, however, was inevitable, and lies in the nature of the thing. The whole is intended to show that a consideration, which would exhaust all the relations and possible consequences of a deed to the very limits of human foresight, cripples the power of acting.

STRACHEY (p. 88): The Clowns open this scene, partly to carry on the action, partly to form, by their utter indifference to the tragedy that is enacting, a background which shall throw that tragedy and its actors into strong relief; and in

ACT V, SC. I.]

Sec. Clo. I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight; the crowner hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial.

First Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?

Sec. Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

First Clo. It must be se offendendo; it cannot be else. For here lies the point: if I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act, and an act hath three branches: it is, to act, to do, and to perform; argal, she drowned herself wittingly.

particular to bring out Hamlet's character by contrasting it with such extreme opposites.

HALLIWELL: Until within a very recent period it was customary for one of the Grave-diggers to preface his labors by divesting himself of about a dozen waistcoats, an operation which always created great merriment, and which, perhaps, had come down by tradition from the players of Shakespeare's own time. 'The Doctor, in The Duchess of Malfi, according to a stage-direction in ed. 1708, 'puts off his four cloaks, one after another,'—a similar stratagem to create the laughter of the audience.

4. straight] JOHNSON: Make her grave from east to west, in a direct line, parallel to the church; not from north to south, athwart the regular line. JENNENS first pointed out that 'straight' here means simply forthwith; and STEEVENS corroborated it by citations from III, iv, 1; OTH. III, iii, 87; Merry Wives, IV, ii, 81. MALONE added from Herbert's Jacula Prudentum: 'There is no churchyard so handsome that a man would desire straight to be buried there.' DOUCE (ii, 261) believes that the Clown refers to the place where the grave should be; suicides were buried on the north side of the church, in unconsecrated ground.

4. crowner] RUSHTON (Sh. Illustrated by Old Authors, p. 72): This word is generally supposed to be a corruption of the Clown's, but it is merely the English of the Law Latin coronator, from corona, a crown, which Holinshed also uses.

9. se offendendo] CALDECOTT: Used for se defendendo, a finding of the jury in justifiable homicide.

11. three branches] WARBURTON: Ridicule on scholastic divisions without distinction and of distinctions without difference. ELZE calls attention to the frequency in The Hystorie of Hamlet of these threefold 'branches of the same idea, e.g.: 'rob, pill, and spoyle;' 'A valiant, hardy, and courageous prince;' 'gestures, countenances, and words;' 'time, means, and occasions,' &c. TSCHISCHWITZ says that this threefold tautological form belongs to the most ancient Germanic legal usage, and cites Grimm as an authority that it is also true of the Old French. A parallel to the present passage is to be found in Grimm: 'egeris, feceris, gesseris.'

13. delver] Walker (Crit. iii, 270): Hence it would appear that the Second Clown is not a gravedigger.

21. Crowner's Quest law] Sir John Hawkins: I strongly suspect that this is in ridicule of a case of forfeiture of a lease to the Crown, reported by Plowden in his 3 Eliza. It seems that Sir James Hales drowned himself in a river in a fit of insanity (produced, it is supposed, by his having been one of the judges who condemned Lady Jane Grey), and the question was whether this did not work a forfeiture to the Crown of his lease. The coroner sat on him, and a verdict of felo de se was rendered. The legal and logical subtleties arising in the course of the case gave a very fair opportunity of sneering at 'Crowner's Quest law':—Walsh said that the act consists of three parts. The first is the imagination, which is a reflection or meditation of the mind, whether or no it is convenient for him to destroy himself, and what way it can be done. The second is the resolution, which is a determination of the mind to destroy himself, and to do it in this or that particular way. The third is the perfection, which is the execution of what the mind has resolved to do. And this perfection consists of two parts, viz. the beginning and the end. The beginning is the doing of the act which causes death, and the end is the death, which is only a sequel to the act.' Much subtlety was expended in finding out whether Sir James was the agent or the patient; or, in other words, whether he went to the water or the water came to him:—'Sir James Hales was dead, and how came he to his death? It may be answered, by drowning; and who drowned him? Sir James Hales; and when did he drown him? In his life time. So that Sir James Hales being alive caused Sir James Hales to die, and the act of the living man was the death of the dead man. And then for this offence it is reasonable to punish the living man who committed the offence, and not the dead man. But how can he be said to be punished alive when the punishment comes after death?' &c., &c. Mal-Long thinks that Sh. must have heard of this case in conversation, for it was deter-
Sec. Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out o' Christian burial.

mined before he was born, and Plowden’s Commentaries were not translated until towards the end of the eighteenth century.

25. thou say'st] CALDECOTT: That is, speak'st something to the purpose. WALKER (Crit. iii, 270) : Surely,—' thou say'st true.' DUCHE (ed. 2) : The expression is elliptical. [May not the full phrase have been ' thou say'st it,' as we find it in Luke xxiii, 3 ; the mere dental sound, into which, in rapid pronunciation, it degenerates being absorbed by the t of say'st? Ed.]

27. even-Christen] THIRLE: [Nichols’s Illust. ii, 229] was the first to point out that this is equivalent to fellow-Christian, and a remnant of the Anglo-saxon emne christen, citing Spelmann’s Gloss., where Spelmann erroneously distinguishes between emne and even. STEEVES cites Chaucer: ' Despitsous, is he that hath desdayn of his neighbour, that is to say, of his evencristen.'—The Persones Tale, iii, 294, ed. Morris. NARES cites Sir Thos. More’s Works, fol. p. 83: 'Proudly judging the lives of their even Christen ; and the maike not fighte against the Turke, [but] arise in greate plumpes to fighte against their even Christen.'—Ib. p. 277. CLARENDON: In Anglo-saxon we find the compound efen-biscep, a co-bishop, efen-esme, a fellow-servant. In Forshall and Madden’s Glossary to the Wycklifforde Versions of the Bible, we find ‘euene-catif, a fellow-prisoner, ‘euenserauant, ‘fellow-servant, and others. [Other instances are given in CALDECOTT ad loc., in HUNTER (New Illust. ii, 261), and in The Mynoure of oure Ladye (E. E. Text Soc. p. 73): ' we ar enformed to haue ... loue ech to other, and to all oure euyn cristens.' In a note on this passage BLUNT cites: ' Therfoare Thomas that is seid Didymus, seide to euyn disciplis,—Wycliffne N. T., John xi, 16; and adds: 'The word is also spelt emcrysten or emcristen, as in Piers Plowman. It occurs in Swedish in the form jämnecristen; where jämne is merely the Swedish spelling of our even.']

30. gentleman] DOUCE (ii, 262): Gerard Leigh, one of the oldest writers on Heraldry, speaks of ' Jesus Christ, a gentleman of great lineage, and King of the Jews.' And again, ' For that it might be known that even anon after the creation

Sec. Clo. Go to.

First Clo. What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

Sec. Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants.

First Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith; the gallows does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that do ill; now, thou dost ill to say the gallows is built stronger than the church; argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again, come.

There is still a concealed piece of wit in the Clown's allusion to the spade. Adam's spade is set down in some of the books of heraldry as the most ancient form of esculcheons; nor is it improbable that the lower part of this utensil suggested the well-known form of the old triangular shields.

36. confess thyself] MALONE: And be hang'd, the Clown would have said if he had not been interrupted. This was a common proverbial sentence. See Oth. IV, i, 39. SYMOUR (ii, 198) thinks that it may perhaps mean that he is to go to the priest and make confession of heathenish ignorance.

39. What is he] STEEVENS refers to a collection of similar queries (which perhaps composed the chief festivity of our ancestors by an evening fire), preserved in a volume in the University Library at Cambridge. 'The innocence of these De maundes Joyous may deserve a praise which is not always due to their delicacy.' COLLIER gives a specimen from a small book, called De maundes Joyous, printed by

(N. & Qu., 5 Oct. 1861): This is merely Shakespeare's English way of representing Yaughan was the well-known keeper of a tavern near the theatre; and we have three items of corroborative evidence which show: First, that a little before the time of this allusion by Sh., which is not found in the Qq, there was about town 'a Jew, one Yohan,' most probably a German Jew, who was a perruquier,—he is mentioned by Jonson in Every Man out of his Humour, V, vi; second, in The Alchemist, I, i, which was produced eleven years afterwards, Subtle speaks of 'an alehouse, darker than deaf John,' a name which sounds like that of our foreign John, anglicised, and its owner grown deaf by lapse of time; third, that there was actually an ale-

our wandering Jew, either in search of a business, or as a profitable extension of his theatrical connection, set up 'the Globe Public-house'; and was thus, as the known refresher of the thirsty actors and audience, mentioned by both Sh. and Jonson? CLARENDON: It is impossible to detect the meaning which lies under this corruption. ELZE (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, xi, 297), who accepts without qualification San's and Nicholson's suggestion, asks whether there be not an allusion to the same Johan in the sneering 'Johannes factotum' that Greene applies to Sh. C. ELLIOT BROWNE (Athenaum, 29 July, 1876): Vaughan is a common Welsh name, and it is surely only necessary to suppose that it was borne by some Welsh tavern-keeper near the theatre.

58. stoup] CLARENDON: This word, meaning a 'drinking-cup,' is still used in college halls. It was applied to vessels of various sizes, and occurs elsewhere in Sh. [See V, ii, 254.]

JENNENS: Sowe of the Qq1 represents the clownish pronunciation of sup.

59-62, &c. THEOBALD was the first to discover that the Clown here sings some stanzas from a poem, which, because it was printed in a collection of Songs and Sonnetts, written by the ryght honorable Lorde Henry Hayward, late Earle of Surry, and other, and published by Tottel in 1557, Theobald inferred was written by the noble lord whose name by precedence of rank stood on the title-page. But Gascoigne, who was ten years old when Surrey was beheaded, attributes the poem in question to Lord Vaux, in an Epistle to a Young Gentleman, prefixed to his Posies: 'The L. Vaux his dittie, beginning thus I loath, was thought by some to be made upon his death-bed,' &c. And WARTON, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii, 45, considers that 'undoubted evidence' is found that Thomas Lord Vaux was the author, in a manuscript in the British Museum (Harkian MS, 1703) in which we have a copy of this poem, beginning I lothe that I did love, with this title: 'A dyttie or sonet made by the lord Vaux [\textsc{\textsuperscript{2}} vaux,'] ap. Arber, p. xiii], in the time of the noble quene Marye, representing the image of Death.' It is thus given in Arber's Re-print of Tottel's Miscellany, p. 173:

The aged lover renouncest love.
I lothe that I did love,
In youth that I thought sweet:
As time requires for my behove
Me thinkes they are not mete,
My lustes they do me leave,
My fancies all be fledde:
And tract of time begins to weaue,
Gray heares upon my hedde.
[59-62. 'In youth, when I did love.']

For age with steyling steppes,
Hash clawed me with his cowche [crowch],
And lusty life away she leapes,
As there had bene none such.
My muse doth not delight
Me as she did before;
My hand and pen are not in plight,
As they have bene of yore.
For reason me denieth,
This youthly, idle rime:
And day by day to me she cryes,
Leue of these toyes in time.
The wrinkles in my brow,
The furrowes in my face:
Say limpyng age will ease him now
Where youth must give him place.
The harbingers of death,
Tome I see him ride:
The cough, the colde, the gaspyng breath,
Doth bid me to provide,
A pikeaxe and a spade
And eke a shrowdyng shete,
A house of dayes for to be made,
Me thinke I here the dark,
That I rob the careful knell:
And bids me leue my wofull warke,
Er nature me commandeth.

Percy in his Reliques suggests that the different corruptions in these stanzas as sung by the Grave-digger [notably line 61] may have been designed by Sh. 'the better to paint the character of an illiterate clown.' Of course there have not been wanting critics who would fain offer these lines cut't and perfect of their limbs, but the task is hopeless, and we must be consoled, as Elze says, by the reflection that the common people in all times and in all climes have sung nonsense. The 'oh' and the 'ah,' as Jennens notes, form no part of the song, but are 'only the breath forced out by the strokes of the mattock.' M. Mason suggests that instead of 'for, ah,' we read for aye, because the Clown means that, though he was in love, it was not meet to contract himself for ever. Clarendon thinks that 'for-a,' there-a, nothing-a (see Text. Notes), represent the drawing notes in which the Clown sings, like 'stile-a' and 'mile-a,' in Wint. Tale, IV, ii, 133. The first two lines of each of the stanzas sung by the Clown are used by Goethe in the Second Part of Faust, for a part of the song chanted by the Lemures while digging Faust's grave. It is noteworthy that Goethe adopted the 'crutch' of the original instead of 'clutch.' See the note on that passage in Bayard Taylor's most admirable translation of Faust, vol. ii, p. 528. Chappell (i, 216): On the margin of a copy of the Earl of Surrey's poems, some of the little airs to which his favorite songs were sung are written in characters of the times. From this copy the following line for 'I loathe that I did love' is taken. On the stage the Grave-digger in Hamlet now sings them to the tune of The Children in the Wood. [See line 89 of this scene.]

65. property of easiness] Clarendon: 'Property' here means individual peculiarity, and 'of easiness' is used with adjectival force, as in I, ii, 4.

68. sense] Bucknill (p. 119): This line is but half truth. Does custom blunt the fingers of a watchmaker, the eyes of a printer, or the auditory nerve of a musician? Did the grave-digger do his own sombre work with less skill because he had been accustomed to it for thirty years? Custom blunts our sensations to those impressions which we do not attend to, and it sharpens them to those which we do. Custom in Ham. himself had sharpened the speculative faculties which he exercised, while it

74. jowls] CLARKE: If proof were wanted of the exquisite propriety and force of effect with which Sh. uses words, and words of even homely fashion, there could hardly be a more pointed instance than the verb 'jowls' here. What strength it gives to the impression of the head and cheek-bone smiting against the earth! and how it makes the imagination feel the bruise in sympathy!

An author in revising his work, when his original ideas have faded from his mind, and new observations have produced new sentiments, easily introduces images which have been more newly impressed upon him, without observing their want of congruity to the general texture of his original design. 85.  mazzard] NARES: A head; usually derived, but with very little probability, from machoir, French, which means only a jaw.  The fact is, that it has always been a burlesque word, and was as likely to be made from mazer, a bowl, as from anything else; comparing the head to a large goblet.  WEDGWOOD confirms Nares's derivation.  'In a similar way, Italian succo, properly a gourd, and thence a drinking cup, is used to signify a skull.'

88.  loggats] The nature of this game has been much discussed, but what appears to be the most exact description is thus given by CLARENDON: '"Loggats," diminutive of log.  The game so called resembles bowls, but with notable differences.  First, it is played not on a green, but on a floor strewed with ashes.  The Jack is a wheel of lignum-vitae or other hard wood, nine inches in diameter and three or four inches thick.  The loggat, made of apple-wood, is a truncated cone 26 or 27 inches in length, tapering from a girth of 8½ or 9 inches at the one end to 3½ or 4 inches at the other.  Each player has three loggats which he throws, holding lightly the thin end.  The object is to lie as near the Jack as possible.  The only place we have heard of where this once popular game is now played is the Hampshire Hog Inn, Norwich.

We have to thank the Rev. G. Gould for a detailed description of the game, which we have abridged as above. Perhaps Ham. meant to compare the skull to the Jack at which the bones were thrown. In Jonson's Tale of a Tub, IV, vi: “Now are such scenes and such characters with deliberate intention, and with a view to artistic relief and contrast, there can hardly be a doubt. We must take it for granted that a man whose works show everywhere the results of judgement sometimes acted with forethought. I find the springs of the profoundest sorrow and pity in this hardened indifference of the Grave-diggers, in their careless discussion as to whether Ophelia's death was by suicide or no, in their singing and jesting at their dreary work. We know who is to be the guest of this earthen hospitality,—how much beauty, love, and heart-break are to be covered in that pit of clay. All we remember of Oph. reacts upon us with tenfold force, and we recoil from our amusement at the ghastly drollery of the two delivers with a shock of horror. That the unconscious Ham. should stumble on this grave of all others, that it should be here that he should pause to muse humorously on death and decay,—all this prepares us for the revulsion of passion in the next scene, and for the frantic confession: 'I loved Ophelia; forty thousand brothers Could not with all their quantity of love Make up my sum!' And it is only here that such an asseveration would be true even to the feeling of the moment; for it is plain from all we know of Ham. that he could not so have loved Oph., that he was incapable of the self-abandonment of a true passion, that he would have analyzed this emotion as he does all others, would have peeped and botanized upon it till it became to him a mere matter of scientific interest. All this force of contrast, and this horror of surprise, were necessary so to intensify his remorseful regret that he should believe himself for once in earnest. The speech of the King, 'Oh, he is mad, Laertes,' recalls him to himself, and he at once begins to rave.

94. lawyer] C. Elliot Browne (Athenaeum, 22 May, 1875): There is a striking imitation of this passage in Raynoldes's Dolorous's Primerose, 1606 [which, despite the eulogy of Sh. contained in it, Caldecott pronounces 'a very mean performance.' Ed.]:

'Why might not this have beene some lawier's pate,
The which sometimes brib'd, brawld, and tooke a Fee.
And lawe exacted to the highest rate;
Why might not this be such a one as he?
Your quirke and quilletts, now Sir, where be they?
Now he is mute and not a word can say,' &c.

94. quiddits] Nares: A contraction of quiddity, which is from [Mid. Lat.] quiditas, not from quidlibet. It was used, as quiddity also was, for a subtilty, or nice refinement. Generally applied to the subtilties of lawyers. Wedgwood: Mid. Lat. quiditas, the whiteness or distinctive nature of a thing, brought into a by-word by the nice distinction of the schools.

94. quilletts] Malone: Nice and frivolous distinctions. The word is rendered by Cole, Lat. Dict.: res frivolae. Nares follows Bailey in deriving it from quibble, a diminutive of quibble. Douce (i, 231) derives it from quidlibet. But Nares objects to this, that the scholastic phrase was uniformly quidlibet, never quidlibet. Wedgwood: Notwithstanding Nares's objection that the scholastic phrase was quod libet, and not quidlibet, the derivation from this source was probably correct. F. J. V. (N. & Qu., 18 Sept. 1875): As 'quiddit' is from the logical term quiditas, why may not 'quillet' or 'quilit' be from another logical term, qualitas? The word may have been originally qualit, then the a may have been thinned into i to make it jingle with 'quidit.'

94-103. LORD CAMPBELL (p. 110): These terms of art are all used seemingly with a full knowledge of their import; and it would puzzle some practising barristers with whom I am acquainted to go over the whole seriatim, and to define each of them satisfactorily.

95. tenures] ELZE (The Athenæum, 20 Feb. 1869) thinks that this word has slipped out of place, that it belongs to the law-terms relative to property, and should therefore be inserted between 'recognizances' and 'fines' in line 99.

96. sconce] CLARENDON: A colloquial and jocose term, like costard, pate, mazzard, &c.

99. 100. statutes, recognizances, fines, double vouchers, recoveries] Ritson: A recovery with double voucher is the one usually suffered, and is so denominated from two persons (the latter of whom is always the common crier, or some such inferior person) being successively vouched, or called upon, to warrant the tenant's title. Both 'fines' and 'recoveries' are fictions of law, used to convert an estate tail into a fee simple. 'Statutes' are (not acts of parliament, but) statutes-merchant and staple, particular modes of recognizance or acknowledgement for securing debts, which thereby become a charge upon the party's land. 'Statutes' and 'recognizances' are constantly mentioned together in the covenants of a purchase deed.

100. fine of his fines] CALDECOTT: This is the end of, or utmost attained by, the operation of all this legal machinery. RUSHTON (Sh. a Lawyer, p. 10): The first 'fine' means not a penalty, but an end. CLARENDON: Compare All's Well, IV, iv, 35.

101. fine dirt] WALKER (Crit. i, 316): Foule? Dyce (ed. 2): I believe the old text is right here. RUSHTON (Sh. a Lawyer, p. 10) acutely interprets this 'fine,' like the preceding 'fine,' in the sense of last. 'His fine pate is filled, not with fine dirt, but with the last dirt which will ever occupy it, leaving a satirical inference to be drawn, that even in his lifetime his head was filled with dirt.'

MALONE understood it as only another name for chart, and paraphrased its use in the present instance by: 'we must speak with the same precision and accuracy as is observed in marking the true distances of coasts, the heights, courses, &c., in a sea-chart.' DYCE selected this as the definition of the present passage in his Glossary. STAUNTON says it is 'rather an allusion to the card and calendar of etiquette, or book of manners, of which more than one were published during Shakespeare's age.' RITSON notes its use by Osric, V, ii, 109. WHATSOEVER its immediate derivation, 'to speak by the card' undoubtedly means to speak with precision.

132. picked] HAMNER: Smart, sharp. JOHNSON: There was, about that time, a picked shoe, that is a shoe with a long pointed toe, in fashion, to which the allusion seems likewise to be made. STEEVENS: This fashion was carried to such excess that it was restrained by proclamation in the fifth year of Edward IV, when it was ordered, 'that the beaks or pykes of shoes and boots should not pass two inches upon pain of cursing by the clergy, and forfeiting twenty shillings. . . . Before this time, and since 1482, the pykes of shoes and boots were of such length that they were fain to be tied up to the knee with chains of silver, and girt, or at least silken, laces.' MALONE: That is, so spruce, so quaint, so affected. There is no allusion to picked or pointed shoes. [DOUCE agrees with Malone here, because this fashion had expired

And yet in the beginning of the play he is spoken of as a very young man, one that designed to go back to school, i.e. to the University of Wittenberg. The poet in the Fifth Act had forgot what he wrote in the First. TSCHEISCHWITZ: Blackstone's criticism is founded on a very erroneous idea of German Universities and their arrangements. 153. [The words of the Grave-digger are so explicit that the age of Ham. has been generally accepted as that of thirty years, and none the less generally has it been felt that this age does not accord, as Blackstone says, with the impression of his youth which Ham. in the earlier scenes gives us. HALLIWELL [see Text. Notes] attempts to avoid the difficulty by the aid of Q, but this aid will hardly bear analysis. In line 1922 of Q, the Clown says 'hers was a scull hath bin here this dozen yeare;' the conversion for sixteen lines then turns upon Ham., and his being sent to England. At the end of it Ham. says, 'whose scull was this?' It is by no means certain that the former skull is here referred to; the Clown may have just turned up another.

It does not follow, therefore, of necessity that it was Yorick's skull that had lain in the ground a dozen years, and Q fails us here at the most important point. GRANT

WHITE, at the beginning of his story of Hamlet the Younger, says that the Prince was twenty years old when the tragedy opens, and at the close his essay, probably overlooking this statement, says that Ham. was thirty years of age in the Fifth Act.

No one would impute to so shrewd a scholar as GRANT WHITE the supposition that the action of the tragedy lasted ten years. EDUARD and OTTO DEVRINT, in their

ed. of Sh., contend, and with much force, for Hamlet's extreme youth [see Appendix, Vol. II], and modify their text accordingly. FURNIVALL (New Sh. Soc.

Trans; Part ii, 1874, p. 494), speaking of the 'startling inconsistencies' in regard to Hamlet's age, says: 'We know how early, in olden time, young men of rank were put to arms; how early, if they went to a University, they left it for training in Camp and Court. Ham., at a University, could hardly have pass'd 20; and with this age the plain mention of youth [in I, iii, 7; I, iii, 11-12; and I, iii, 123-4] agrees.

With this, too, agrees the King's reproach to Ham. for his intent in going back to Wittenberg; and Hamlet's own revolt-of-nature at his mother's quick marriage to his uncle. Had he been much past 21, and had he had more experience of then women, he'd have taken his mother's changeableness more coolly. I look on it as certain, that when Sh. began the play he conceived Ham. as quite a young man.

But as the play grew, as greater weight of reflection, of insight into character, of knowledge of life, &c., were wanted, Sh. necessarily and naturally made Ham. a formed man; and, by the time that he got to the Grave-diggers' scene, told us the Prince was 30,—the right age for him then; but not his age when Laer. and Pol. warnd

Oph. against his blood that burnd, his youthful fancy for her,—"a toy in blood"—

[153. Hamlet's age.]

What matter? Who wants 'em made consistent by the modification of either part? The "thirty" is not in Q; yet who wants to go back to that? Minto (The Examiner, 6 Mar. 1875) contends that apart from the Grave-digger’s speech and the thirty years of the wedded life of the Player King and the Player Queen (and he is at a loss to understand how these passages came into the play), 'the natural construction is that Ham. and his associates were youths of seventeen, fresh from the University. That was the usual age in Shakespeare’s time at which young noblemen set out on their travels, and there is no reason to suppose that he thought of altering the University age in his play, and no hint that Ham. was so very much older than his companions.'

... 'A proper conception of Hamlet's age is essential to the understanding of the play. He is a youth called home from the University by his father's death; a youth of the age of Romeo, or of young Prince Hal at the time of his father's accession.'

... 'Hamlet’s action is not the weak and petulant action of an emasculated man of thirty, but the daring, wilful, defiant action of a high-spirited sensitive youth, rudely summoned from the gay pursuits of youth, and confronted suddenly with monstrous treachery, with crime that blurs the modesty and grace of nature, that makes the very sunlight fire, and loads the sweet air of heaven with pestilence.' Marshall (p. 181) thinks that Sh. intended Ham. to be nearer twenty than thirty; the general features of his character are those of youth, and the frequent allusions throughout the play to his being very young forbid the belief that he was really thirty years old. The Grave-digger may mean that 'he began to serve his apprenticeship thirty years before; but he may not have come to the trade of grave-maker till some years later; so that it does not necessarily follow that the day when King Hamlet overcame Fortinbras was thirty years previously.'

... 'The most material objection against Hamlet’s being more than between twenty and twenty-three years of age is that if he were older his mother could scarcely have been the object of such a passion as that of Claudius.'

Minto afterwards (in The Academy, 18 December, 1875) expressed his views at greater length. Against the weighty authority of the Grave-digger is to be placed Laer., whose advice to Oph. in simple prose means that she was not to trust Ham., because he was at an age of changeful fancies and fleeting attachments. Who would speak of the love of a man of thirty as 'a violet in the youth of prizy nature'? The very idea is a profanation of words, which carry such fragrance with them when applied to the first love of budding youth. Again, the University age of young noblemen at that time was from seventeen to nineteen, and Laer. had just left the University; Ham. wanted to go back to it, and Hor. is under suspicion of playing 'truant.' The play is full of allusions to the youth of the personages coeval with Ham. Fort. is 'Young Fortinbras,' Laer. is 'Young Laertes,'—the epithet in both cases being repeated. The King speaks of skill with the rapier as a 'very riband in the cap of youth.' Hamlet's envy of Laertes's fame with the rapier has an almost boyish air. Making Ham. thirty also adds some improbability to the succession of Claudius to his murdered brother; if at that age Ham. had tamely submitted to such a usurpation, and desired to go back to school in Wittenberg, he would have been too contemptible a character to be fitted for any dramatist's hero. Prof. Dowden having pronounced, in a notice of Werder's Hamlet (The Academy, 4 Dec. 1875), that theory incredible which 'makes Ham., the utterer of the saddest

and most thoughtful soliloquies to be found in Sh., a boy of seventeen; Minto replies that we are apt to underrate the precocity of boys of seventeen. 'I venture to say that sad and thoughtful questionings of the mysteries of life are more common among boys under twenty than among men of thirty.' 'Not only is it possible for sad thoughts to come to a youth of seventeen, but it is at such an age, when the character is not deeply founded, that the shattering of first ideals is most overwhelming. The terrible circumstances that overthrew Hamlet's noble mind gave a stimulus to the development of his thoughtfulness apart from an increase of years. The fresher and brighter our conception of the gay boy-world out of which he was summoned, the deeper becomes the monstrous tint of the horrible ambition, murder, and incest, which appalled his vision and paralyzed the clear working of his mind when he was first called upon to play a man's part in the battle of life. Too much has been said of the philosophic temperament of Ham.; impulse and passion were more in his nature than philosophy; his philosophy was not a serene growth, a natural development of a mind predisposed to thought; it was wrung out of him by circumstances terrible enough to make the most obtuse mind pause and reflect.' Prof. Dowden (The Academy, 25 Dec. 1875) urged the following considerations in condemnation of the theory that Ham. was a youth of seventeen: 'The poet's youngest heroines (children of the South) are aged fourteen (Juliet, Marina) and fifteen (Miranda). The age of Perdita is sixteen. Sh. loved these earliest years of budding womanhood. What is the corresponding period of early manhood that charms the poet's imagination? At what age does Sh. conceive that boyhood is blooming into adult strength and beauty? I answer, from twenty-one to twenty-five. The stolen sons of Cymbeline, boys just ready to be men, are aged twenty-three and twenty-two; Florizel looks about twenty-one (Winter's Tale, V, i, 126); Troilus, a beardless youth (two or three hairs upon his chin), is older: 'he ne'er saw three-and-twenty.' I am not aware that we can determine Romeo's age. Prince Hal at the time of his father's accession was some twelve years old, but Sh. represents him as considerably older. When the battle of Shrewsbury took place (Henry being in fact sixteen years old), Sh., I believe, intends his age to be 'twenty-two or thereabouts' (1 Hen. IV.: III, iii, 212). When Henry V ascended the throne, his age was twenty-six, and there is no reason to suppose that Sh., who had up to that point made him older than the Prince Henry of history, now represented him as younger. The Bishop of Ely says: 'My thrice puissant liege Is in the very May-morn of his youth.' Test the theory of Hamlet's extreme youth by the other plays. Are we to imagine the utterer of the soliloquy, 'To be or not to be,' as five or six years the junior of the boys of old Belarius, and that at a period of life when each added year counts for much? Is Florizel,—one of Shakespeare's ideals of youthful grace,—four years older than Ham.? Did Ham. begin his observations on society (V, i, 150) at fourteen? Were his schoolfellows,—dispatched on a critical mission to England,—also youths of seventeen? Can it be proved that any chief male personage in Shakespeare's plays is aged seventeen, or eighteen, or even nineteen? The dating of the Player-King's marriage is important in this discussion. His thirty years' wife (representing Gertrude) is not too old to win a second husband's love; therefore Gertrude, although the 'hey-day of her blood' is 'tame,' is not necessarily too old; we may imagine her forty-seven. But I am not greatly concerned to maintain the Player-King's and the Grave-digger's dates, except for the sake of resisting rash tampering with Shakespeare's text, I can imagine Ham. as a man in the 'May-morn of his youth' at twenty-six or twenty-five. I am much concerned, however, to oppose such a misreading of the play as would not only render the conception of Ham. incoherent, but would pervert our view of an entire group of lovely characters,—the Florizels and Polydores and Ferdinands of Sh. And I would note that Sh. found it possible to think of thirty as a youthful age. The Grave-digger himself speaks of 'young Hamlet.' In Much Ado we read (of fashions in clothes): 'How giddily a' turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five-and-thirty.' In the Sonnets Sh. names forty (not thirty) as the age when time has marred the face. In the Elegy on Burbadge, that great actor is praised for his equal success in the part of 'young Hamlet' and of 'old Hieronymo.' If Burbadge represented Ham. as thirty years of age, still, in spite of the thirty years, Burbadge's Ham. passed for young. I will, however, yield something, and if any critic will efficiently knock upon the mazzard that 'absolute' knave, the Clown, I accept as satisfactory the age assigned by Marshall,—twenty-five.

In the Academy, 11 March, 1876, J. W. Hales cites the following quotation from a well-known book as noteworthy with regard to Hamlet's age: 'For fashion sake some [Danes] will put their children to schoole, but they set them not to it till they are fourteeene years old; so that you shall see a great boy with a beard learne his A B C, and sit weeping under the rod when he is thirty years old.'—Nash's Pierce Penniless's Supplication to the Devil, ed. Collier, for the Sh. Soc. p. 27. 'So, after all,' adds Hales, 'there is perhaps less inconsistency in the play than has been supposed. I do not mean that there is none.'

This construction is sustained by the reading of Q2: ‘those lippes . . . they abhorre me.’ CLARKE: ‘It’ in this sentence, and in ‘my gorge rises at it,’ is used in reference to the idea of having been borne on the back of him whose skeleton remains are thus suddenly presented to the speaker’s gaze, the idea of having caressed and been fondled by one whose mouldering fleshless skull is now held in the speaker’s hand.

Dyce: We find, indeed, 'imperial Caesar' in Cymb. V, v, 474; but then that play comes to us only through the Folio.

204. patch a wall] Caldecott cites the following passage from Harrison's Description of England, to show that the text gives no very unfaithful picture of the general state of habitations in the days of Shakespeare's youth: ' — in the open champaine countries they are enforced for want of stuffe to vse no studs at all, but onlie posts ... with here and there a girding, wherevnto they fasten their splints or radels, and then cast it all ouer with clae to keepe out the wind, which otherwise would annoie them. 220. crants] Warburton pronounced this an 'evident corruption of chants, the true word,' on the ground that a specific rather than a generic term was required to answer to 'maiden strewments.' Edwards, whose book, Canons of Criticism, was written in ridicule of Warburton's edition, suggests derivatively (7th ed., p. 147) that Warburton had better have 'pitched upon grants, want, pants, or any other, provided it rhymes to chants; because it would seem by the very next speech of the Friar that these same chants were the only things denied her ['To sing a requiem']. If Warburton's reading be approved, we should, to restore integrity, make a slight alteration in line 221, and read 'Her maiden instruments for instruments. Music, not only vocal, but instrumental also.' Heath supposes 'crants' to be a misprint for grants, that is, 'the ceremonies granted by custom to those who died unmarried,' and that Sh, afterwards substituted rites. Johnson, on the authority of an anonymous correspondent, was the first to explain 'crants' as the German word for garlands; adding, that 'to carry garlands before the bier of a maiden, and to hang them over her grave, is still the practice in rural parishes.' 'Crants;' therefore, was the original word, which Sh., discovering to be provincial, and perhaps not understood, changed to a term more intelligible, but less proper. 'Maiden rites give no certain or definite image. Maliky doubted whether this and many other changes in the Folio were made by Sh., as an attentive comparison of the Qq and Ff would show. Dyce (ed. 1) emphasises the fact on which both Warburton and Dr Johnson lay stress, viz.: that a specific, definitive image is here essential, and that rites does not fulfil this requirement, while 'crants' does. Of the advocates for rites, Knight and White are the chief; the former urges that 'the "maiden strewments" are the flowers, the garlands, which piety scatters over the bier of the young and innocent. The rites included these.' White agrees with him, that 'crants' would hereby be a mere repetition. Elze cannot avoid the conviction that 'crants' is a sophistication, since a most unusual and foreign word would never be applied to a most usual and domestic ceremony. In Dyce's second ed. he gives this note of Lettsom's: 'Most of the edd. explain 'crants' by garlands; but the German Kranz is singular, and the singular seems indispensible here. From a note to Prior's Danish Ballads, it would seem that young unmarried Danish ladies wear, or wore, chaplets of pearl; at least, 'fair Elsey' is described as wearing one; and the translator (vol. iii, p. 111) says that this is the same as the 'virgin crant (sic) of Oph.' Guided by this, Dyce, in his Gloss., defines 'crants,' a crown, a chaplet, a garland, and cites Jamieson, Etym. Dict. of the Scottish Lang.: 'Crance .... Teut. krantz, corona, corolla, sertum, strophium, Kilian. Germ. Kranz; &c. It is perhaps worth noticing that Jamieson, in this same passage cited by Dyce, gives an instance of the plural: 'Thair heards wer garnishit gallandlie With costly crancis maid of gold.'—Watson's Collection of Choice Songs, &c., ii, 10. Halliwell gives a wood-cut of a funeral garland seen by Fairholt in 1844, suspended in St Albans Abbey. 'It was then,' says
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home

Fairholt, 'very old, and I was told by the sexton that such garlands were once commonly borne before the bodies of unmarried women to the grave, and suspended in the church afterwards, but that the custom had ceased twenty years before this time. The substructure was formed of wooden hoops, to which were affixed rosettes of coloured paper, and flowers, real and artificial, covered the whole; when I saw it nothing but the remains of the artificial decorations remained; but the sexton explained to me that the whole had been originally thickly covered with flowers.' According to _Nares_ no other instance of the use of this word had been found; it was reserved for _Elze_ to discover two examples of it elsewhere. In _Chapman's Alphonson_ (ed. Elze, 1867, p. 82) there is the following stage-direction: 'Enter ... Saxon, _Mentz_ like Clowns with each of them a Mitre with Corances on their heads.' In a note on 'corances,' Elze says, referring to the present passage in _Hamlet_: 'Sh., in my opinion, made the acquaintance of this German importation at the Steelyard, or he witnessed the funeral, in London, of some young German girl, where the coffin was decked, according to the German custom, with "crances;" nay, both may have been the case. From the present passage it would appear that we ought to write _crance_. See Cooper's _List of Foreign Protestants and Aliens_, where "Hans" is usually spelt "Hance" or "Haunce."' The second instance occurs on p. 117, 'When thou hast stolen her dainty rose-corance.'

221. _bringing home_] _CLARENDON_: In these words reference is still made to the marriage rites, which in the case of maidens are sadly parodied in the funeral rites. See _Rom. & Jul._ IV, v, 85-90. As the bride was brought home to her husband's house with bell and wedding festivity, so the dead maiden is brought to her last home 'with bell and burial.'

222. _Of_] Equivalent to _with_. See _ABBOTT_, § 193, which most nearly explains the use of 'of' here.

225. _a requiem_] _CALDECOTT_: _Sage_ of the _Ff_ is _grave_ and _solemn_. _KNIGHT_: We suspect some corruption of the text. _COLLIER_: The _MS_ alters _sage_ to _sad_, which may be the true word. _DYCE_: But _qy_. is it not rather a mistake for _such_? _SINGER_: 'Requiem' is so called from the words of the service: 'Requiem aeternam dona eis, Domine.'

226. _peace-parted_] _CLARENDON_: A singularly-formed compound, of which there

232, 233. shouldst have been...to have decked] ABBOTT, § 360: It is now commonly asserted that such expressions as 'I hoped to have seen him yesterday' are ungrammatical. But in the Elizabethan, as in Early English authors, after verbs of hoping, intending, or verbs signifying that something ought to have been done, but was not, the Complete Present Infinitive is used.

234. woe] WALKER (Crit. iii, 271) conjectures woe. In a footnote LETTSOM says: It is whimsical enough that the Qq, which in this line correctly read treble for the F, terrible, in the very next line read double for the F, correct treble. I mention this that they may not be trusted too confidently for 'woe' in preference to 'woes.' [I think it likely that either the r in woer of F, is a misprint for s, or else the compositor mistook the s in the MS from which he set up. Moreover, the plural somewhat avoids the cacophony of the singular: 'Oh, treble woe.' Ed.]

259. do for her] F. G. T. (M. & Qu., vol. iv, p. 156, 1851) denies that Ham. really rants: 'Ham., a prince, is openly cursed, and even seized by Laer., and yet he only remonstrates. He uses phrases so homely that there is something very like scorn in them: "What wilt thou do for her?" is the quietude of contempt for Laertes's insulting rant; and so, if my memory deceive me not, the elder Kean gave it. "Do for her" being contrasted with Laertes's braggadocio "say." Then come the possibilities:
weep, fight, fast, tear thyself (all, be it noted, common lovers' tricks), drink up eisel, est a crocodile. Here the crocodile probably refers to those put up in spirits in apothecaries' shops. Here we have possibilities put against the rant of Laer.; the doing against the saying; things that could be done, for Ham. ends with "I'll do it."
But his quick imagination has caught an impetus from its own motion, and he goes on:
"Nay, I'll even out-prate you," and then follows his superior rant, not uttered with vehemence, but with quiet philosophic scorn.'

WALKER (Crit. iii, 271): Can any good reason be given why we should write woo't or woul't here and not elsewhere? LETTSOM (Footnote to Walker): Halliwell, in his Dict., has 'Woot. Will thee. West.' In the passage before us the context requires wili, and this, indeed, is the text of Q.

CLARENDON: A colloquialism by which Ham. marks his contempt for Laer. In Ant. & Cleo. IV, ii, 7; IV, xii, 79, it indicates affectionate familiarity.

264. eisel] With the exception of 'the dram of eale,' no word or phrase in this tragedy has occasioned more discussion than this Easil or Eisle, which, as it stands, represents nothing in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth, if from the last we exclude the vessels of Q. Rowe and Pope blindly followed the blind composers of the QqFf. THEOBALD saw the difficulty so clearly that subsequent criticism has chiefly ranged itself on one or other of the two interpretations suggested by him, viz. that the word either represents the name of a river, or is an old word, meaning vinegar. Theobald's objection to its being the name of a river is that it must be some river in Denmark, and that he knew of none there so called, nor any other, idem romanus, nearer than 'the Yssel, from which the Province of Over-yssel derives its title in German Flanders.' This objection comes strangely from Theobald, for none knew better than he that Sh., who did not hesitate to make Ham. swear by St. Patrick, would have been just as likely to mention a river in farthest Ind as in Denmark, if the name flashed into his mind, and would have been intelligible to his audience. 'Besides,' continues Theobald, 'Ham. is not proposing impossibilities to Laer., as the drinking up a river would be, but he rather seems to mean, Wilt thou resolve to do things the most shocking and distasteful? and, behold, I am as resolute.' HANMER, forgetful of his own good rule of not giving 'a loose to fancy,' changed 'Eisil' into Nile, without a note or comment, in his first edition, to indicate that it was not Shakespeare's word; and then, to fill up the measure of the verse, introduced another woot before 'eat.' CAPELL (Notes, &c., i, 146) says it is 'palpable' that a river is intended, but there is no absolute necessity, because a crocodile is mentioned, that the river must be the Nile, and Hanmer's better reading would have been Nilus, which would have suited the metre without the addition of woot.

(See post Else.) Capell then goes on to say that 'Sh. sought a river in Denmark, and, finding none that would do for him, coin'd the word—Eisil; in a supposition
[264. 'drink up eisel.']

that there might be a brook so denominated, which *Elisinour stood upon, and took it's name from.' Capell therefore printed Eisil in his text, in Italics. Steevens says that Ham. certainly meant (for he says he will rant) to dare Laer. to attempt anything, however difficult or unnatural, such as draining the channel of a river, or trying his teeth on an animal whose scales are supposed to be impenetrable. 'Theobald's Ysell,' adds Steevens, 'would serve Hamlet's turn or mine. The river is twice mentioned by Stowe, p. 725: 'It standeth a good distance from the river Isel, but hath a sconce on *Isell of incredible strength.' Again, by Drayton, in Polyolbion, The twenty-fourth Song, p. 359, ed. 1748: 'Th' one o'er Isell banks the ancient Saxon's taught: At over-Isell rests,' &c. But in an old Latin account of Danemarke and the neighboring provinces I find the names of several rivers little differing from Eisil, or Eisell, in spelling or pronunciation. Such are the Eisa, the Oeel, and some others. . . . Sh. might have written the Weisel, a considerable river which falls into the Baltic Ocean, and could not be unknown to any Prince of Denmark.' Malone, in his first edition, 1790, having adopted Theobald's eisel, discarded it in the Var. 1821, and adopted Steevens's interpretation on the ground that such hyperbole was common among ancient poets. So in Eastward Ho, 1609: 'Come drink up Rhine, Thames, and Meander dry.' Also Greene's Orlando Furioso, 1599: 'Else would I set my mouth to Tygres streams, And drinke up overflowing Euphrates.' And in Marlowe's Jew of Malta: 'As sooner shalt thou drink the ocean dry, Than conquer Malta.' Boswell cites Tro. & Cres. III, ii, 84, as containing a 'similar exaggeration;' but the similarity is by no means exact. More to the purpose is his reference to Chaucer's Romant of the Rose [l. 5712, ed. Morris]: 'He undirfongith a grete peyne, That undirtakith to drynk up Seyne.' Nares considers the challenge to drink vinaer, in such rant, so inconsistent and even ridiculous that we must decide for the river, whether its name can be exactly found or not. Caldecott agrees with Steevens, that it refers to the Yssel, the most northern branch of the Rhine, one which flows nearest to Denmark, and by Zutphen into the Zuyder Zee. Caldecott adds strength to Steevens's supposition, that it might refer to the Vistula or Weisel, by showing, in a passage from King Alfred's Anglosaxon version of Orosius, that Denmark's possessions once extended as far as the Weisel-mouth, but very sensibly adds that even if Weisel were nearer to the text, both to the eye and ear, than it is, it is very little likely that Sh. was read in the early Danish geographies, or that he gave himself any concern about them; Sh. took his geography from more accessible sources, and from points nearer home. Knight adopts Caldecott's interpretation. In N. & Qu., vol. ii, p. 241, 1850, Singer started a discussion of the meaning of this phrase by asserting that 'eisel' means Wormwood Wine, a nauseously bitter medicament much in vogue in Shakespeare's time. Could he have proved this, the discovery would have been valuable, but unfortunately the premises from which he drew his conclusion were weak. 'In Thomas's Ital. Dict. 1562,' says Singer, 'we have Asentio, Eysell,' and Florio renders Asentio by Wormwood. What is meant, however, is Absinthes or Wormwood wine. The inference here is that Florio refers to a liquid Wormwood, whereas he defines 'Asentio, . . . the herb Wormwood,' which, I am afraid, weakens Singer's conclusion. In the same journal (vol. iv, p. 64, 1851) J. S. W. sums up the controversy, and decides in favor of a river, because to drink a potion of vinegar 'is utterly tame and spiritless in a place where anything but tameness is wanted, and where it is quite out of keeping with the rest of the speech.' Elze contends vigorously for Nilus, not only because crocodiles are immediately mentioned, but because in Elizabethan times the Nile was the home, and the synonym, for everything wondrous and monstrous, and was moreover held to be one of the mightiest of rivers, if not the mightiest. To drink up the boundless Nile is an hyperbole than which nothing could better befit the occasion; Ham. wished to express a pure impossibility. To Delius's well-put objection that it is difficult to see how so familiar a word as Nile could be sophisticated into vessels, Esil, and Estil, Elze opposes the supposition that the Dutch Yssel or the Danish Oesil was a marginal gloss of some wiseacre who thought it more appropriate to the unities of the drama, and which by accident crept into the text. In N. & Qu., 12 Feb. 1859, Cuthbert Bede offers a citation which would bring the river much closer to the doors of the Globe theatre than any yet proposed: 'The Saxon etymon of Iseldon, according to Mr Sharon Turner, is Yseldune, i.e. the Down of the Yssel, which I take to have been the original name of some river, most likely of the river of Wells, which flowed into the Fleet River; but I consider also that Yssel or Eyssel is the same as Ouesel, the diminutive of Ouze or Eyse, in the British language, signifying either a river or water.—Yselden; a Perambulation of Islington, by T. E. Tomkis, Esq. Halliwell thinks that the Oesil or Isell is referred to, and adds, 'obscure streams certainly, but the reading is hardly to be rejected on that account, for the name would be at least as familiar to an Elizabethan audience as that of the mountain of Ossa, mentioned in the same speech. Sh. in all probability adopted both names from the older play on Hamlet.' Dr Scadding (Canadian Journal, No. LXI, 1866, p. 70) also advocates Nilus, and attributes to 'indistinctness of writing, perhaps, the wrong orthography of a y for an i, and an accidental transposition of syllables in the printing-office' the conversion of 'Nilus into Eyssel, Esil or Estil (in these several ways the modern text is given), conjectured by the commentators to be variously estil (that is, perhaps, vinegar in the sense of poison) or vessels (that is, huge caldrons) or some proper name. Keightley adopts Yssel, because its name may have been familiar to the English mind from the fact that it was at Zutphen, on its banks, that Sir Philip Sidney received his death-wound.

Thus far I have cited only those who are in favor of the name of a river, and have given all their arguments except one, which I have not repeated in every instance, because all more or less emphasize it; and this argument, which many find convincing, lies in the words 'drink up;' this, it is claimed, means to drain, to exhaust, and must apply to a river or to something concrete,—it cannot apply to vinegar or to anything in the abstract; Ham. never could have challenged Laer. to drink up all the vinegar in the world,—there was a limit even to professed rant. Malone was the first to note that this phrase, 'drink up,' does not of necessity mean to exhaust totally, citing in proof Shakespeare's 114th Sonnet, where it is synonymous with merely to drink: 'Drink up the monarch's plague, this flattering,' and again in the same Sonnet: 'And my great mind most kingly drinks it up;' and in Tra. & Ces. I, iii, 211; 'his silence drinks up his applause' (through an oversight Malone cites this from Timon). 'In Shakespeare's time,' adds Malone, 'to drink up often meant no more than simply to drink.' So in Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598: "Sorbirle, to sip or sup up any drink." In like manner we sometimes say, "when you have swallowed down this potion," meaning when you have swallowed it.' He might have cited from Hamlet, I, iv, 10: 'drains his draughts of Rhenish down.' Gifford is more emphatic on this point in a note.
[264. 'drink up eisel.']

on Jonson's Every Man in his Humour, IV, v (Works, p. 122, ed. 1816, cited by Dyce): 'It may just be observed that off, out, and up are continually used by the purest and most excellent of our old writers, after verbs of destroying, consuming, eating, drinking, &c.; to us, who are less conversant with the power of language, they appear, indeed, somewhat like expletives; but they undoubtedly contributed something to the force, and something to the roundness, of the sentence.' In confirmation of this use of up, Dyce cites the following passages: Love's Lab. Lost, IV, iii, 395; All's Well, IV, iii, 250; King John, IV, iii, 133; As You Like It, II, i, 62; Tro. & Ctes. III, ii, 189. If more instances be needed, at least a dozen can be found by reference to reference to Schmidt's invaluable Lexicon, s.v. 7; or to Mrs Furness's Concordance to Shakespeare's Poems, s.v. 'up.' The passages, however, cited by Malone and Dyce do not satisfy Grant White of the soundness of Gifford's explanation; he thinks that in all of them 'up' conveys the sense either of totality or completeness, as in the lines from *Love's Lab. Lost, All: W*ell, and Tro. & Ctes. III, ii, 189 (and herein Schmidt agrees with him); or of eagerness or insatiability, as in the lines from 114th Sonnet and Tro. & Ctes. II, iii, 211. The use of 'up' in the present passage seemed, therefore, to Grant White fatal to the interpretation of 'eisel,' or vinegar. But granting that the sense of 'totality or completeness' is inapplicable here, is not 'eagerness or insatiability' the very sense required? I cannot but believe, therefore, that in the present passage, 'drink up eisel,' means no more than 'to quaff eisel,' whatever that may be.

I now turn to the second interpretation by Theobald, who says: 'I am persuaded the poet wrote "eisel," that is, Wilt thou swallow down large draughts of vinegar? The proposition, indeed, is not very grand; but the doing it might be as distasteful and unsavory as eating the flesh of a crocodile. And now there is neither an impossibility nor an anticlimax; and the lowness of the idea is in some measure removed by the uncommon term.' Thereupon he cites Chaucer, The Remaunt of the Rose, line 217: '—breed Kneden with eclipse strong and egre,' Shakespeare's 111th Sonnet: 'Potions of eisel 'gainst my strong infection,' and Sir Thomas More's Poems (p. 21, ed. 1557): 'remember therewithal How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall.' Capell, in his dissent from this interpretation, indulges in a gird of most unusual humour for him: 'if Eisel, an old word that signifies vinegar, be the right reading, it must be because 'tis wanted for sauce to the crocodile.' Steevens, too, has his merry fling at it: 'neither is that challenge very magnificent which only provokes an adversary to hazard a fit of the heart-burn or the colic.' Hunter (ii, 263) thinks that the 'Potions of eyssel' in the 111th Sonnet prove that it was not any river so called, but a despe rate drink. 'The word,' he adds, 'occurs often in a sense of which acetum is the best representative, associated with verjuice and vinegar. It is a term used for one ingredient of the bitter potion given to our Saviour on the cross, about the composition of which the commentators are divided. Thus, the eighth prayer . . . in the Salisbury Primer, 1555, begins thus:—"O blessed Jesu I . . . I beseech thee for the bitterness of the ayssel and gall that thou tasted," &c.' Singer (ed. 2): 'It was a fashion of the gallants of Shakespeare's time to do some extravagant feat as a proof of their love in honor of their mistresses, and among other the swallowing of some nauseous potion was the most frequent. . . . In Thomas's Ital. Dict., 1552, we have 'Assentio. Eysell,' and Florio renders the same word by Wormwood. Dyce: 'For my own part I certainly believe that eisel is meant here.' the word (and it was common enough formerly) is' spelled Eysell in the 111th Sonnet, ed. 1609. 'In the "hyperbolical" passages cited by Malone, what rivers do those poets mention? The Rhine, the Thames, the Meander, the Euphrates,—and not such obscure streams as the Yssel, the existence of which the commentators had some difficulty in detecting.' COLLIERS says that the (MS) makes no change in Esile. GRANT WHITE confesses himself unable to conjecture what the word means; if a river be intended, 'we must regard the word as a remnant of a play, or tale, unknown to us, which preceded Shakespeare's tragedy.' In N. & Qu. (Aug. 10, 1872), JOHAN DE SOYRES says that he remembers in a book of Scandinavian legends an account of Thor's trials of strength with the Giants, and that one of these trials was to drink a lake Esyl dry, and suggests that this is Hamlet's allusion. The CLARENDOI'N EDITORS 'consulted Mr Magna'son on this point, and he writes as follows: "No such lake as Esyl is known to Norse mythology or folklore. Thor's only trial at drinking an impossible draught was at Ulgardakil's, where he had to empty a horn the other end of which mouthed into the sea: in consequence, he only achieved drinking the ocean down to the ebb mark."' The citation from the 111th Sonnet convinces MOBERLY that the same word there, is used here; MOBERLY adds: 'a large draught of vinegar would be very dangerous to life.' There yet remain, however, four interpretations to be mentioned. First: In N. & Qu. (Oct. 5, 1872) JOHN KERSHAW calls attention to a passage in Fletcher's Wife for a Month, IV, iv [p. 366, ed. Dyce], where Alphonso [who is burning up with poison and indulges in the most extravagant figures of speech] says: 'I'll lie upon my back, and swallow vessels.' What more probable, therefore, than that Fletcher's "swallow vessels" had its origin in Shakespeare's "drinke up vessels" of Q?" Second: TSCHISCHWITZ prints Esule in his text, and explains it as Euphorbia Esula, spurge, a poisonous plant, whose juice was employed anciently as an emetic. Third: SCHMIDT (St. Lexicon, s. v. Eysell): 'Hamlet's questions are apparently ludicrous, and drinking vinegar, in order to exhibit deep grief by a wry face, seems much more to the purpose than drinking up rivers. As for the crocodile, it must perhaps be remembered that it is a mournful animal.' Fourth: The late Rev. J. B. DYKES, Mus. Doc. (in a MS note sent to me by Dr Ingleby), suggests the old English word isy, signifying ashes, mentioned in Halliwell's Archais and Provincial Dist. s. v. Isle, where Halliwell cites: 'Isyl of fyre, Fatulla,' Pr. Parv. p. 266. 'One might possibly extract a meaning out of this: "feeding on ashes," or swallowing flame; but this again is far-fetched and impossible.' In conclusion, the present Editor believes Eysil and Esil to be misprints for Eysell.

279, 280. Let . . . day] Caldecott: 'Things have their appointed course, nor have we power to divert it,' may be the sense here conveyed, though the proverb is usually applied to those who for a time fill stations to which their merits give them no claim. Tschirschwitz detects here a reference to Laer, the King, and to Ham. himself. 'Let the herculean power of Laer. do what it may, and the cat, which creeps stealthily in the dark, mew, the faithful dog will have his turn at last.'

280. day] B. Street (Athenaum, 5 Sept. 1868): These lines are so familiar that we pay little attention to their wording, and what seems the correct reading, 'dog will have its bay,' has not been suspected. That it is bay, and not 'day,' appears so probable as to be almost certain if we consider that a dog might have its day of popularity without any detract from a very Hercules,—at least without any expressed disparagement of him; the idea is the expression of detraction on the part of an inferior against his better. Each animal severally employing its natural utterances in carping at worthiness; the cat mewing its cavils, the dog barking its dislike. In The Athenaun, 3 Oct. 1868, 'A. O. S.' showed that the phrase is older than Sh. by giving an extract from a letter from the Princess Elizabeth to her sister, Queen Mary: — as a doge hath a day, so may I,' &c. In The Athenaun, 19 Nov. 1870, P. A. Daniel adduced two other instances of the use of the phrase. In The Interlude (printed in 1573), entitled New Custom, II, iii: 'Well if it chance that a dogge hath a day,' &c. Also, in Jonson's Tale of a Tub, II, i: 'A man hath his hour, and a dog his day.' This was written in 1663, 'later,' adds Daniel, 'than Hamlet, no doubt, but Jonson would scarcely have adopted a meaningless bit of slang.' Elze (Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, Bd. xi) adds a fourth example from Summer's Last Will and Testament, ed. Dodsley, vol. ix, p. 37.

282. In] Abbott, § 162: 'In' is here used metaphorically, where we should say, 'in the thought of.'

Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.—
This grave shall have a living monument;
An hour of quiet thereby shall we see;
Till then, in patience our proceeding be.

285. living] Clarendon: Perhaps it is used by the speaker in a double sense;
first, that of enduring, as the Queen would understand it; secondly, Laer. would be cognizant of the deeper meaning, by which the life of Ham. is menaced.

1. sir] Tschischwitz calls attention to the distant tone with which Ham. speaks to Hor.; twice in the first four lines, and afterwards, also, he addresses him as Sir;
furthermore, throughout the dialogue the frequent omission of the personal pronoun (as ‘had my desire,’ &c.), and the more frequent use of participial and infinitive clauses, justify the suspicion that the first fifty-five lines are not Shakespeare’s.

5. mutines] Malone: For mutiner or mutineer; see the verb in III, iv, 83.
6. bilboes] Steevens: This is a bar of iron with fetters annexed to it, by which mutinous or disorderly sailors anciently were linked together. The word is derived from Bilboa, a place in Spain, where instruments of steel were fabricated in the utmost perfection. To understand Shakespeare's allusion completely, it should be known that, as these fetters connect the legs of the offenders very close together, their attempts to rest must be as fruitless as those of Ham., in whose mind there was a kind of fighting that would not let him sleep. Every motion of one must disturb his partner in confinement. The bilboes are still shown in the Tower of London among the other spoils of the Spanish Armada.

6. Rashly] Johnson: Ham, delivering an account of his escape, begins with saying, That he rashly—, and then is carried into a reflection upon the weakness of human wisdom. I rashly—praised be rashness for it—Let us not think these events casual, but let us know, that is, take notice and remember, that we sometimes succeed by indiscretion when we fail by deep plots, and infer the perpetual superintendence and agency of the Divinity. The observation is just, and will be allowed by every human being who shall reflect on the course of his own life. Tyrwhitt suggested that the rest of Hamlet's speech after 'Rashly,' and Horatio's reply, 'That is most certain,' should be put in a parenthesis, so that 'Rashly' may be joined in construction with 'in the dark Groped I,' &c. He also reads: 'And praised be rashness, for it lets us know,' and does not put a period after 'will' at the end of the speech, but prints 'will;'—. Although Staunton in a note said that he agreed with Tyrwhitt's suggestion, he nevertheless did not conform his text thereto. Undoubtedly there is force in Tyrwhitt's arrangement. Collier: The reasoning in this passage is consecutive in Hamlet's mind, but, perhaps, hardly so in his expressions. Tschischwitz follows Tyrwhitt, except that he prints 'for it let us know,' because 'let' is clearly the perfect tense, since Ham. is speaking of an act that is past.

6-11. Strachey (p. 93): That is to say, that when we have exhausted all our powers of thought and reasoning upon the consideration of the course we should pursue, and when it yet remains dark to us,—sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,—then a higher wisdom and providence than our own will assuredly come to our aid, and employ some apparently unimportant accident,—something which to us seems merely a rashness or indiscretion,—to strike the hour and give command for action. This is Hamlet's final, crowning, discovery; a discovery which every man of Hamlet's tendency of mind must make for himself before it is possible for him to turn his intellectual powers to practical account and to make his philosophical speculations available to the every-day service of God and man. Till such a man has learnt the value of accidents in breaking the thread of his meditations when it is spun long enough, and has formed the habit of seizing and using these accidents, he must remain an unpractical visionary.

8. Our] Warburton prints: 'Rashness . . . lets us know; Or indiscretion, &c., and vaguely interprets, 'Rashness acquaints us with what we cannot penetrate to by plots.' Heath (p. 547) exposed the futility of this change.
When our deep plots do fail; and that should teach us
There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will.

9. deep] deep (Q,Q,C; dear F,F, Rowe, Cald. Knt, Dyce i), El. Dyce ii, Huds. fall (Q,Q,C; fall Q,C), dear F,F, Rowe, Cald. Knt, Dyce i, Del. Sta.

9. fail] MALONE thinks that fail and 'fail' were by no means likely to have been confounded; he therefore adheres to the Ff, and cites Ant. & Cleo. II, vii, 88. CALDECOTT says that fail means 'lose their thinking, poignancy, and virtue; become abortive.' DYCE (in his first ed. retaining fail in his text) cites the parallel phrase: 'And if I fail not in my deep intent,' Rich. III: I, i, 149. COLLIER (ed. 2): Very possibly 'fail' of the (MS) is the true word. CLARENDEON interprets fail: 'to grow rapid, and tasteless, like wine; hence to become vain and worthless,' and cites the passage from Ant. & Cleo. cited by Malone. INGLEBY (The Sh. Fabrications, p. 115) suggests that fail and 'fail' were used as synonymous by Sh., and cites in proof Com. of Err. I, ii, 37; and Merry Wives, I, i, 262; and Sir John Oldcastle: 'London, you say, is safely look'd unto, Alas, poor rebels, there your aid must fail.' In a note on 'if ye fall in't' in The Two Noble Kinsmen, III, vi, 236, LITTLEDALE says that Ingleby has confirmed him in this thinking, and not fail, is the right reading in that passage, and he gives a fuller note from Ingleby than is contained in The Sh. Fabrications cited above, as follows: Compare line 272 [of this same scene in The Two Noble Kinsmen]: 'Let it not fall aegn, Sir.' There are remarkable instances of the use of this intransitive verb as a synonym of fail. Sh. affords us only two certain examples of this: 'her better judgement May fall to match you with her country forms And happily repent.'—Oth. III, iii, 237. Here 'fall' is not happen (Schmidt, wrongly, begin, get into), but fail. [The second instance is the present passage in Hamlet, where] fall is nonsense; and fail makes sense. Fall, of course, is the opposite of succeed. Now our word for this is 'fail.' There is also one example in The London Prodigal, and two in Isaiah, xxxi, 3, and lvii, 14. 15. [DYCE disapproved of this suggestion of Ingleby's. ED.]

10. ends] STEEVEVS: Dr Farmer informs me that these words are merely technical. A wool-man, butcher, and dealer in skewers, lately observed to him that his nephew (an idle lad) could only assist him making them: '—he could rough-hew them, but I was obliged to shape their ends.' Whoever recollects the profession of Shakespeare's father will admit that his son might be no stranger to such terms. I have frequently seen packages of wool pinned up with skewers. CALDECOTT says that the phrase is doubtless technical, in so far as it is drawn from a handicraft, and that, as the use of tools is general, the phrases belonging to them pass into general use. KNIGHT feers at Farmer's suggestion; and HUNTER (ii, 264) says 'the sooner it is expunged the better. Rough-hew is not and never was technical. It is a common English word applicable to all kinds of work where there is room for ordinary manual labor before the master comes and applies a skilful hand. Thus, in Palsegrave's Table of Verbs, 1530: 'I rough-hewe a pece of tymber to make an ymage of;' Florio, 1598: "Abheware, to rough hew any first draught, to bungle ill-favouredly."' STAUNTON has a note to the same effect, and cites Baret's Alcezar.

13. scarf'd] CLARENDON: Thrown on like a scarf, i.e. without putting the arms through the sleeves. Compare Much Ado, II, i, 197.
14. find out them] CLARENDON: This is here used as if it were a compound verb. Comp. Rom. &c Jul. IV, ii, 41; Jul. Cæs. I, iii, 134. The objective personal pronoun is frequently placed after, and not before, the preposition which belongs to the verb. Modern usage only admits this order when the pronoun is emphatic. See ABBOTT, § 240. [Also II, ii, 150.]
15. fingered] HAMNER (Some Remarks, &c., p. 46): Hamlet's stratagem was possible, but not very probable; methinks their commission was kept in a very negligent manner to be thus got from them without their knowing it.
16, 17. so...to] See Much. II, iii, 47; III, i, 87, 88; and ABBOTT, § 281.

In Coverdale's translation of the Psalms (Ps. xc, or according to the present numbering xci, 5) we find: 'So y' thow shalt not nede to be afraied for any bugges by night ner for arrowes that flyeth by daye.' In Cotgrave 'Goblin' and 'Bug' are given as translations of the French Gobelin.

23. bated] MALONE: Without any abatement or intermission of time. CLARENDON: The execution must follow immediately without any exception of leisure.

29. villainies] For other instances of the confusion of villaine and villainie in the Folio, see WALKER (Crit. ii, 44).

30, 31. prologue...play] THEOBALD paraphrased his emendation (which he says he owed in part to Warburton and Bishop) thus: Being in their snares, e're I could make a Prologue (take the least previous step) to ward off danger, they had
They had begun the play,—I sat me down; Devised a new commission; wrote it fair; I once did hold it, as our statists do, A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much How to forget that learning; but, sir, now It did me yeoman's service. Wilt thou know The effect of what I wrote?

begun the play (put their schemes into action) which was to terminate in my destruction. Warburton: They had begun to act, to my destruction, before I knew there was a Play towards. Ere I could mark the prologue. Heath (p. 549) agrees with his predecessors in thinking that 'They' refers to 'villains,' not to 'brains,' and paraphrases: Before I could take the very first step towards forming my own scheme, they had already proceeded a considerable way in the execution of theirs. Johnson was the first to refer 'They' to its right antecedent, 'brains': 'Before he could summon his faculties, and propose to himself what should be done, a complete scheme of action presented itself to him. His mind operated before he had excited it.' Caldecott returns to Heath's interpretation, as do Delius and Elze, but, with these exceptions, all the rest follow Johnson. Clarke sees herein a vivid picture of Shakespeare's own mode of composition, his teeming brains beginning a play, and seeing all its scope and bearings, ere he had well penned the opening words. Moerly: 'Before I formed my real plan, my brains had done the work. This line should be carefully remarked. Ham. writes the commission under a strong impulse rather of imagination than will, the ingenuity of the trick captivating him. Then the encounter with the pirate puts an end to the chance of undoing it; and thus he is driven, somewhat uneasily, to justify his action to Hor. As the latter receives his narrative with something like surprise, and even with a touch of compassion, we may conclude with safety that Hamlet's kindly nature would have cancelled the letters but for the accident which hindered his doing so.'

33. statists] Steevens: Statesmen. Blackstone: Most of the great men of Shakespeare's time, whose autographs have been preserved, wrote very bad hands; their secretaries very neat ones. Ritson: 'I have in my time, (says Montaigne) seen some, who by writing did earnestly get both their titles and living, to disavow their apprenticeship, marre their pen, and affect the ignorance of so vulgar a quality.' Florio's translation, 1603, p. 125.

36. yeoman's service] Steevens: The ancient yeomen were famous for their military valor. 'These were the good archers in times past,' says Sir Thomas Smith, 'and the stable troop of footmen that affraide all France.' Clarendon: They composed the mass of the infantry. Their formidable character is mentioned by Bacon in his Essay: Of the true greatness of Kingdomes and Estates, p. 122, ed. W. A. Wright.
Ham. An earnest conjuration from the king,
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them like the palm might flourish,
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear
And stand a comma 'tween their amities,

42. a comma] a cement Han. White.

38. conjuration] See Rom. & Jul. V, iii, 68, where this passage seems to have been overlooked by the critics.
42. comma] THEOBALD (Nichols's Lit. Hist. ii, 579), writing to his 'most affectionate friend,' Warburton, says that it should be either 'no comma,' i. e. as no bar should stand between their friendships:—Or, 'And stand a comma 'tween their amities,' i. e. as peace should intervene and prevent amities.' He did not repeat these suggestions in his ed., but adopted Warburton's emendation, and justifies it in a note which he attributes to Warburton: 'The poet without doubt wrote, 'And stand a Commer's,' i. e. a guarantee, a common mother. Nothing can be more picturesque than this image of Peace's standing, drest in her wheaten garland, between the two Princes, and extending a hand to each. We thus frequently see her on Roman coins.' But WARBURTON, in his ed., goes further, and says that Commer here means 'a trafficker in love, one who brings people together, a procuress.' [Cotgrave sustains him in this meaning.] CAPELL (Notes, &c., i, 147) was taken by this allusion to Peace as represented on coins, and so adopted Commer. HEATH (p. 549) well interprets: 'As a comma stands between two several members of a sentence, without separating them otherwise than by distinguishing the one from the other, in like manner peace personified, or the Goddess of Peace, is understood to stand between the amities of the two kings.' [DYCE (ed. ii) cites this paraphrase of Heath's, and adds: 'Perhaps so.'] JOHNSON: The comma is the note of connection and continuity of sentences; the period is the note of abruption and disjunction. Sh. had it perhaps in his mind to write,—That unless England complied with the mandate, war should put a period to their amity; he altered his mode of diction, and thought that, in an opposite sense, he might put, that peace should stand a comma between their amities. BECKET (Shakespeare's Himself Again, i, 73) suggested, 'And stand a co-mate,' i. e. 'companion; peace should be associate with them.' STAUNTON considered this 'co-mate within the range of possibility.' And ELZE (Athenaeum, 11 Aug. 1866) lit upon the same conjecture independently of Becket, and thinks that this coincidence adds strength. It should be added that Elze, one of the very best English scholars in Germany, had merely heard at the time of Becket's conjecture, and had no knowledge of the quality of the rest of that wild 'Nonsense Book.' TSCHISCHWITZ follows Becket. CALDECOTT cites: 'I fear the point of the sword will make a comma to your cunning.'—N. Breton's Packet of Letters, p. 23, 1637. HUNTER (ii, 264) thinks Sh. meant to ridicule such an absurd expression in some speech or document of the time. SINGER (ed. ii) reads, 'And stand a co-mere,' i. e. 'as a mark defining them. Mere is a boundary mark, the lapis terminalis of the ancients; and it should be remembered that the god of mers or bounds, Terminus,
And many such-like Ases of great charge,

47. shriving-time] Hunter (ii, 265): This was a term in common use for any short period. All Ham, meant was that they should be put to instant death.

47. allow'd] Hamner (Some Remarks, &c., p. 46): The punishment of Ros. and Guil was just, because they had devoted themselves to the service of the Usurper in whatever he should command. Malone: From The Hystorie of Hamlet, it appears that the faithful ministers of Fengon were not unacquainted with the import of the letters they bore [see Vol. II, p. 103]. Sh. probably meant to describe their representatives, Ros. and Guil., as equally guilty. So that Hamlet's procuring their execution, though certainly not absolutely necessary to his own safety, does not appear to have been a wanton and unprovoked cruelty. Steevens: I apprehend that a critic and a jurymen are bound to form their opinions on what they see and hear in the cause before them, and not to be influenced by extraneous particulars unsupported by legal evidence in open court. I persist in observing, that from Shakespeare's drama no proofs of the guilt of Ros. and Guil can be collected. They may be convicted by the old Hystorie; but if the tragedy forbears to criminate, it has no right to sentence them. This is sufficient for the commentator's purpose. It is not his office to interpret the plays of Sh. according to the novels on which they are founded,—novels which the poet sometimes followed, but as often materially deserted. Perhaps he never confined himself strictly to the plan of any one of his originals. His negligence of poetical justice is notorious; nor can we expect that he who was content to sacrifice the pious Oph. should have been more scrupulous about the worthless lives of Ros. and Guil. Therefore I assert that in the tragedy before us their deaths appear wanton and unprovoked; and the critic, like Bayes, must have recourse to somewhat long before the beginning of the play to justify the conduct of its hero. Kyd (p. 326): There is not one word uttered by Ros. and Guil. throughout the play that does not proclaim them to the most superficial observer as creatures of the King, purposely employed to betray Ham., their friend and fellow-student. Strachey (p. 96): Something more than Hamlet's own preservation is at stake; he is the representative and avenger of the rights of the crown and laws of Denmark, outraged by a murderer and a usurper, (for he was only elected because he contrived to murder the rightful possessor at a moment when his natural heir was absent); and he has to act under those circumstances, which at rare and long intervals in the history of every country, call on some man to maintain the spirit of the laws by disregarding for a moment their letter. It is Hamlet's duty to avenge the crown...
Hor. How was this seal'd?

63. think'st thee] The editors who follow Q interpret this as equivalent to 'bethink thee.' WALKER in dealing with this passage exhibited, as his admirable editor, Lettsom, well says, profound critical sagacity, and, almost entirely unaided by any old copies, put aside ancient and modern corruptions, and made his way at once to the genuine reading: 'It may be observed' (Vers. 281) 'that thinkst it thee also occurs in the Elizabethan poets in the sense of you doest so.' He then cites the present passage, and gives the reading of the present text; and also corrects the same phrase in Cartwright, The Ordinary, III, ii (Dodsley, x, 216): "Little think'st thee how diligent thou art To little purpose." Think'st thee, of course. (I understand, by the way, that the think in methinks is, originally and etymologically, not the same with our present verb to think; but that it is a corruption of another verb signifying to seem; so that methinks is as it appears to me.) CLARENDON offers another solution: Perhaps the true reading is 'think'st thee,' the final s of the Quarto being mistaken for c. The word 'think' in this passage is not the same in origin as 'think' used personally, but comes from Anglosaxon thincan, to seem, appear, which is used impersonally with all personal pronouns. The other word is thenca, to think, and the distinction is maintained in the German denken and denken. In Rich. III: III, i, 63: 'Where it seems best unto your royal self, for 'seems,' which is the reading of the earliest Q, the later editions have 'thinkst' or 'think'st.'

63. stand me] ABBOTT, § 204: This phrase cannot be explained, though it is influenced, by the custom of transposition. Almost inextricable confusion seems to have been made by the Elizabethan authors between two distinct idioms: (1) 'it stands on' (adv.), or 'at hand,' or 'upon' (comp. 'instead,' vpoohax), i.e. 'it is of importance,' 'it concerns,' 'it is a matter of duty;' and (2) 'I stand upon' (adj.), i.e. 'I in-sist upon.' In (1) the full phrase would be: 'it stands on, upon, to me,' but, owing to the fact that 'to me' or 'me' (the dative inflection) is unemphatic, and 'upon' is emphatic and often used at the end of the sentence, the words were transposed into, 'it stands me upon.' 'Me' was thus naturally taken for the object of upon. [In the present passage] it means 'it is imperative on me.' CLARENDON: The construction is here interrupted by the parenthesis.

To quit him with this arm? and is't not to be damn'd,
To let this canker of our nature come
In further evil?

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short; the interim is mine;
And a man's life's no more than to say 'One.'

   happen to hear that little word, 'The interim is mine!' It means more mischief than all the monologues! No threats, no imprecations, no more mention of smiling damned villain; no more self-accusal; but solely and briefly, 'It will be short; the interim is mine!' Then, for the first time, we recognize the extent of the change that has been wrought in Ham.; then, for the first time, we perfectly comprehend his quiet jesting with the Clown, his tranquil musings with Hor. The man is transformed by a great resolve: his mind is made up! The return of the vessel from England will be the signal for his own execution, and therefore the moral problem is solved: the only chance of saving his life from a lawless murderer is to slay him; it has become an act of self-defence; he can do it with perfect conscience. He has calculated the return voyage; he has allowed the longest duration to his own exist-name well known at the time. Henslowe's company performed an Osriche in 1597, perhaps Heywood's lost play of Marshal Osric.

83. water-fly] Johnson: A water-fly skips up and down upon the surface of the water without any apparent purpose or reason, and is hence the proper emblem of a busy trifler. Clarendon: The name is given to several kinds of flies haunting water in Moufet's Theater of Insects, ed. 1658, p. 943.

88. chough] Johnson says this is a kind of jackdaw. Harting (p. 115) calls it the Red-legged Crow, or the Cornish Chough, as it is sometimes called, from its being considered a bird peculiar to the south-west coast of England, though now known to be much more widely distributed. As to its pronunciation, Skinner derives the name à sono naturali quem avis edit, and Cotgrave translates Cauè (clearly a case of onomatoporia), and Cauèrette, by A Chough or Jacke Daw. Finally, Ritson (p. 92) says that the name of the Cornish bird is pronounced by the natives chow, which is conclusive. Caldecott doubts much if, in the present instance, from its association with wealth, it have any relation to that bird, but inclines to think it should be chuff. [Is not Caldecott right here? The chow is, perhaps, applicable to Osr. on the score of chattering, but how about the spacious possession of dirt, the special application made by Ham.? If chuff be here meant,

Its application accords with Cotgrave's use of the word: 'Franc-gontier. A substantially yonker, wealthie chuffe;' or again, 'Maschefouyn: A chuffe, boore, lob-cocke, lozell; one that is fitter to feed with cattell, then to conuerse with men.' GIFFORD (Massinger's Duke of Milan, III, i, p. 279, ed. Gifford) says 'chuff is always used in a bad sense, and means a coarse, unmannnered clown, at once sordid and wealthy.' Dyce (Gloss. s. v. chuff) adds instances corroborating Gifford from A Gorous Gallery of Gallant Inventions, 1578, and Marlowe's Ovid's Elegies. Whether it be chow or chuff, the whole speech is puzzling. Ed.]

90. Sweet] MOMMSEN (p. 258) shows by manifold examples that 'sweet' was a common mode of address in the Elizabethan court language; it occurs very frequently in Marlowe. See III, ii, 48.

99. complexion] Those who follow the Q3 adopt WARBURTON'S explanation: Ham. was going on to say 'or my complexion deceives me,' but the over-compliance of Osr. interrupted him. WALKER (Crit. ii, 322) follows the Q3, because 'for' of the Fl is so frequently misprinted for or. LETTSOM upholds the Fl. DANIEL (p. 76) suspects that Hamlet's speech should end at 'hot,' and that 'for my complexion' is a petty oath ('For my complexion!'), which should be given to Osr. See Rosalind in As You Like It: 'Good my complexion!' III, ii, 204.
HAMLET

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry,—as 'twere, 100—I cannot tell how. But, my lord, his majesty bade me signify to you that he has laid a great wager on your head.

Sir, this is the matter—

Ham. I beseech you, remember—

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.

Osr. Nay, in good faith; for mine ease, in good faith. 105

104. remember—] Pope. remember. 105. in good faith] Ff, Rowe + , Cald. 106. let] a Qq.

104. remember] MALONE, in his ed., 1790, conjectured that Ham. was aboveto say 'remember not your courtesy,' because he could not possibly have said 'remember your courtesy' when he wanted Osr. to put his hat on. Malone believed that courtesy meant to uncover the head, and accordingly in Love's Lab. Lost, V, i, 104, he added not in Armado's speech, 'I do beseech thee remember not thy courtesy; I beseech thee apparel thy head,' and Dyce shared this opinion, for he considered the 'not' as indispensable. STANFORD discarded the 'not' in Love's Lab. Lost, and in a note on the passage says: 'Whatever may have been the meaning of the words, or whether they were a mere complimentary periphrasis, without any precise signification, the following quotations prove beyond a question that the old text is right, and that the expression refers to the Pedant's standing bareheaded: —'I pray you be remembered, and cover your head.'—Lusty Juvenis, ed. HAWKINS, p. 142. 'Pray you remember your courtesie... Nay, pray you be cover'd.' —Every Man in His Humour, I, i, ed. GIFFORD. GRANT WHITE (The Galaxy, Oct. 1869) upholds Staunton, adding: 'It seems clear that Osric's completed speech would have been, 'remember your courtesy.' The phrase was a conventional one for 'be covered.' But why? The removal of the hat, in Shakespeare's time, even more than now, was regarded as a mark of courtesy. I am unable to offer any explanation of the phrase which is acceptable even to myself. I can only suggest that the difficulty lies not in courtesy, but in some peculiar and, perhaps, elliptical use of remember. ELZE suggests 'remember thy bonnet.'

105. for mine ease] FARMER: This seems to have been the affected phrase of the time. Thus, in Marston's Malcontent, 1604: 'I beseech you, sir, be covered.—No, in good faith for my ease.' And in other places. MALONE: It appears to have been the common language of ceremony in our author's time. 'Why do you stand bareheaded?' (says one of the speakers in Florio's Second Frutes, 1591,) you do yourself wrong. Pardon me, good sir, (replies his friend;) I do it for my ease.' Again, in A New Way to Pay Old Debts, by Massinger, II, iii, 1633: '—Is't...
Sir, here is newly come to court Laertes; believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences, of very soft society and great showing; indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see.

Ham. Sir, his beneficent suffers no perdition in you; though, I know, to divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, and yet but yaw neither, in respect and his imitators will appear no more than his shadows.' CLARENDON: The only illustration which can be given of this dialogue, in which Ham. talks nonsense intentionally and Osr. unintentionally, is the dialect of Parolles in All's Well, and of Don Armado and Holofernes in Love's Lab. Lost.

JOHNSON: I believe raw to be the right word; it is a word of great latitude; it signifies unripe, immature, thence unformed, imperfect, unskilful. The best account of him would be imperfect in respect of his quick sail. The phrase 'quick sail' was, I suppose, a proverbial term for activity of mind. HEATH: The meaning undoubtedly is that Laer. was but young (raw) in proportion to the quick progress he had made in all gentlemanly accomplishments. CALDECOTT: Raw is unready, untrained, and awkward. Compare Per. IV, ii, 60; As You Like It, III, ii, 76. DYCE (Remarks, &c., p. 220): 'Nothing, I think, can be more certain than that the passage should stand thus: "and if [which was often mistaken by our early printers for 'yet,' perhaps because it was written ye] but yaw neither in respect of his quick sail." "To yaw (as a ship), hue illuc vaclcare, capite naturae." —Coles's Dict. The substantive "yaw" occurs in Massinger: "O, the yaws that she will make! Look to your stern, dear mistress, and steer right, Here's that will work as high as the Bay of Portugal."—Very Woman, III, v; Works, iv, 293, ed. 1805, where Gifford remarks: "A yaw is that unsteady motion which a ship makes in a great swell, when, in steering, she inclines to the right or left of her course."' ELZE thinks the possible solution of this difficulty is to consider 'yaw' as a transitive verb, and he thus interprets: 'An inventory of Laertes's excellences would dizzy the arithmetic of memory; yet it would not let it stagger hither and thither (like a badly-steered ship), in view of his quick sail.' A quick-sailing ship holds a steadier course than one that sails slowly. STAUNTON says he must admit his inability to understand Dyce's reading, and adds: 'Yet' is certainly suspicious, but the word displaced we have always thought was witt, not it, and the drift of Hamlet's jargon to be this: his qualifications are so numerous, and so far surpass all ordinary reckoning, that memory would grow giddy in cataloguing, and wit be distanced in attempting to keep pace with them. WHITE: There seems to be no doubt that 'yet' was mistaken for 'yet.' CLARKE believes raw to be used in the same sense as in As You Like It, and interprets: 'your description is but inefficient and inadequate after all.' ABBOTT, § 128: The ellipsis of the negative explains neither. That is, 'do nothing but lag clumsily behind neither.' 'Neither,' for our either, is in Shakespeare's manner, after a negative expressed or implied. TSCHICHWITZ says raw is merely a misprint for row, and so gives it in his text, and thus interprets: 'Memory, even with the help of arithmetic, cannot overtake this swift sailor, but can only row while he sails. At the present day we should say: and yet but sail neither in respect of his full steam.' CLARENDON: If this passage stands as Sh. wrote it, any meaning it may have has defied the penetration of commentators to detect. If 'yet' is a mistake for ye or it, of his quick sail. But, in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article, and his infusion of such 115 death and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror, and who else would trace him, his umbrage, nothing more.

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the 120 gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osr. Sir?

Hor. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.

---

we should require some such word as let or make to precede. The sense would then be: 'to attempt to catalogue his perfections would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, and make it stagger, as it were, in pursuit of his swift-sailing ship.' The two metaphors are a little difficult to separate.

114. sail] Collier (ed. 2) prints sale, and thinks that sellingly of the Qq in line 118 may very possibly be right when taken in connection with it, and 'inventorily,' line 112. Sale has reference to the value, and speedy sale of the qualifications, of Lear.

115. article] Johnson: This is obscure. I once thought it might have been 'of great altitude,' but I suppose it means 'a soul of large comprehension, of many contents;' the particulars of an inventory are called articles. Caldecott defines it: 'Of great account or value.'

115, 116. infusion, . . . rareness] Johnson: 'Dearth' is dearness, value, price. 'And his internal qualities of such value and rarity.' Caldecott: The qualities with which he is imbued or tinctured are of a description so scarce and choice. Clarendon defines 'infusion,' essential qualities.

117. trace] Clarendon: Follow. Compare 1 Hen. IV: III, i, 48; and Gorges's Trans. of Lucan, bk i, p. 36 (ed. 1614): 'And in their turnes next to them trace Prelates of an inferior place.'

121. more rawer] See II, i, 11.

123. Is't . . . tongue] Johnson: This may mean, Might not all this be understood in plainer language? But then, 'you will do it, sir, really,' seems to have no use, for who could doubt but plain language would be intelligible? I would therefore read: Is't possible not to be understood in a mother tongue? You will do it, sir, really. Heath (p. 550): Read, 'It is not possible to understand in another tongue.' That is, such language as this is the only one which communicates ideas to us. It is spoken ironically. Jennens: This speech is addressed to Osr. Hor. finding him posed says, 'Is't not possible to understand? In another tongue you will do't, sir, really,' i.e. Are you defeated at your own weapons? Can't you understand your own kind of jargon? If so, you had better speak in another tongue, make use of common sense without any flourishers, and you'll not be in danger of being put out of countenance. Malone: This speech is addressed to Ham. 'Another tongue' does not mean, as I conceive, plainer language (as Dr Johnson supposed), but language so fantastical and affected as to have the appearance of a foreign tongue; and in the following words Hor., I think, means to praise Ham. for imitating this kind of babble so happily. I suspect, however, that the poet wrote: 'Is't possible not to understand in a mother tongue?' The very same error occurs in Bacon's Advancement of Learning, 410, 1605, b. ii, p. 60: '—the art of grammar, whereof the use in another tongue is small, in a foreine tongue more.' The author, in his table of Errata, says it should have been printed,—in mother tongue. Staunton: Should we not read, 'in's mother tongue?' Walker (Crit. iii, 273): Surely read, 'a mother tongue,' with Johnson. [TschiSchwitz adopted it.] Hudson: Hor. means to imply, that what with Osric's euphuism, and what with Hamlet's catching of Osric's style, they are not speaking in a tongue that can be understood; and he hints that they try another tongue, that is, the common one. Morely: 'Can't you understand your own absurd language on another's tongue? Use your wits, sir, and you'll soon be at the bottom of it.'

124. You... really] Heath (p. 550): Undoubtedly read, 'You do't, sir, rarely,' i.e. You have exactly hit upon the humour of this language. Heussi: This is undoubtedly addressed to Osr. To Ham. he would not have used 'sir,' but 'my lord.'

132. approve] Johnson: If you knew I was not ignorant, your esteem would not much advance my reputation. To 'approve' is to recommend to approbation. Singer (ed. 2): 'If you did, it would not tend much toward proving me, or confirming me.' What Ham. would have added, we know not; but surely Shakespeare's use of the word 'approve,' upon all occasions, is against Johnson's explanation of it. Clarendon: 'Would not be much to my credit.'

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but, well.

138. by them] Caldecott: There is nothing here to refer to, no antecedent to 'them.' It must mean 'the qualities ascribed to him by the public voice.'

142. wagered] White: The reading of the Ff is in perfect accordance with Shakespeare's usage, and that of his contemporaries. So in Cym. I, iv, 144.

143. imposed] Johnson: Perhaps it should be depone. So Hudibras: 'I would upon this cause depone, As much as any I have known.' But, perhaps, 'imposed' is pledged, impawned, so spelt to ridicule the affectation of uttering English words with French pronunciation. Collier and Dyce (Glos.) agree in accepting this explanation: that it is Osric's affected pronunciation of impawned.

145. hangers] Steevens: Under this term were comprehended four graduated dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate 146 carriages, and of very liberal conceit.

Ham. What call you the carriages?

Hor. [Aside to Ham.] I knew you must be edified by the margent ere you had done.

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more germane to the matter if we could carry cannon by our sides; I would it might be hangers till then. But, on: six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-155 conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this 'imposed,' as you call it?

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, sir, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits; he hath laid on twelve for nine; and it would 160 straps by which the sword was attached to the girdle. See Chapman's Iliad, xi, 27: 'The scaberd was of silver-plate, with golden hangers grac'd.' Knight and Halliwell give pictorial illustrations.

147. liberal conceit] CLARENDON: Elaborate design.

149. margent] In old books explanatory comments were printed in the margin.

See Rom. & Jul. I, iii, 86.

160. twelve for nine] JOHNSON: This wager I do not understand. In a dozen passes one must exceed the other more or less than three hits. Nor can I comprehend how, in a dozen, there can be twelve to nine. The passage is of no importance; it is sufficient that there was a wager. MALONE: The King hath laid that come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe 161 the answer.

_Ham._ How if I answer No?

_in a game of a dozen passes, or bouts, Laer. does not exceed you three hits; the King hath laid on the principle of him who makes a bet, with the chance of gaining twelve for nine that he may lose; or the King (by the advantage allowed to Ham.) hath odds, tantamount to four to three. If the words, 'he hath laid on,' refer to Laer., it means that he has laid on the principle of one who undertakes to make twelve passes for nine that his adversary shall make; on the ratio of twelve to nine. Ritson (p. 212) maintains that there were to be but twelve passes in all, and Laer., to win, must have got eight hits, whereas Ham. would have won if he had got only five; so that he had clearly the advantage of Laer., in point of number, three whole passes or hits, and the odds were eight to five, which is in the same arithmetical proportion of twelve to nine, in Hamlet's favor before they began to play.'
[This is, I think, virtually the same explanation as that given by Elze.] Seymour (ii, 203): 'If in the dozen passes Ham. shall be hit seven times, and Laer. only three, the King will lose his wager.' Mitford (Gent. Mag. 1845): The reading of the Fl of one for 'laid on' may be an error for twon, or on; indeed the whole phrase,
'he hath laid on twelve for nine,' seems very like an interpolation from the margin.
One might say that, by a loose manner of speaking, not exceeding three hits may mean not exceeding more than two. It may also be observed that these numbers were probably represented by Arabic figures, and not by letters, and were more liable to be altered and made corrupt. Quarterly Review (March, 1847, vol. lxxix, p. 332): Osric never stoops to use the language of ordinary mortals. 'He hath laid on twelve for nine' is not he has laid twelve to nine, but he has wagered for nine out of twelve. The King backs Ham. Laer., who is the celebrated fencer of the age, is to give the Prince great odds:—the King stipulates out of the twelve passes for nine hits from Laer. without his being declared winner. So also in the for-er part of the sentence, 'he shall not exceed you three hits,' does not mean that the sum of Laertes's hits over Hamlet's shall not be more than three. In a dozen passes six hits each would place them on a par, and Osric calls Laertes's excess the number of hits that he makes above his own half. This, the King bets, will not surpass three, rendering the total amount to nine, which tallies with the other form under which the bet is expressed. Moberly: 'Each is to attack twelve times, going on till a hit is made: and Laer. bets that he will hit Ham. twelve times before Ham. can hit him nine times. That is: Ham. has three points given him, and with these odds he trusts that he shall win.' Tschischwitz assumes that 'a dozen' is merely an indefinite number, and gives an elaborate calculation on the basis of twenty-one rounds. [It may be said of all these calculations what Clarendon says of one of them, they are doubtless correct, but do not explain the form in which the wager is put.] Steevens refers this very 'unimportant passage' to the members of the Jockey Club, at Newmarket, 'who on such subjects may prove the most enlightened commentators, and most successfully bestir themselves in the cold unpoetic dabble of calculation.'

162. the answer] Caldecott: Meet his wishes. Clarendon: Compare Cymb.

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall; if it please his majesty, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the foils be brought; the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him if I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame and the odd hits.

167. breathing time] CLARENDON: The time of relaxation and rest. Compare Much Ado, II, i, 378; Tro. & Cret. II, iii, 121. SEYMOUR (ii, 203) proposes, 'Sir, I will ... hall: It is the breathing ... me—if it please his majesty, let,' &c., or else, 'Sir, I will ... hall, if it please his majesty. It is the breathing time,' &c. It was Hamlet's customary breathing time, whether his majesty pleased or not.

169. will gain] For instances of 'will' used for shall, see WALKER (Vers. 238; and Crit. ii, 348). ABBOTT, § 519, says that 'will' is probably used here by attraction with a jesting reference to the previous 'will.' 'My purpose is to win if I can, or, if not, to gain shame and the odd hits.'

177. lapwing] JOHNSON: I see no particular propriety in this image. Osric did not run away till he had finished his business. We may read:—'ran away,' i.e. 'This fellow was full of unimportant bustle from his birth.' JENNENS: Osric is shortly after spoken of as 'young Osric,' he may therefore be supposed to be but a half-formed courtier; and under this image of the lapwing Hor. ridicules his for-
Ham. He did comply with his dug before he sucked it. Thus has he, and many more of the same bevy that I know the drossy age dotes on, only got the tune of the 180

wardness of talk and self-conceit,—his putting on the courtier before he was properly qualified. STEVENS: Thus, in Greene’s Never Too Late, 1616: ‘Are you no sooner hatched, with the lapwing, but you will run away with the shell on your head?’ MALONE: In Meres’s Wit’s Treasury, 1598: ‘As the lapwing runneth away with the shell on her head as soon as she is hatched.’ CALDECOTT: ‘He is prematurely hasty, starts almost before he has means, ere he has found legs or message, to carry or be carried.’ CLARENDON: The lapwing was also a symbol of in-sincerity, from its habit of alluring intruders from its nest by crying far away from it. Osr. was both forward and insincere. [See HARTING, Ornithology of Sh., p. 220.]

178. comply WARBURTON: The true reading is: compliment, i.e. stand upon ceremony with his dug, to show that he was born a courtier. CAPELL (i, 148): ‘He must have ask’d the dug’s pardon before he handled it.’ JENNENS justifies the reading of Q: ‘Do you wonder,’ says Ham., in effect, ‘at his affecting the courtier now? Why he had done it from his very cradle.’ CALDECOTT well paraphrases: He was complaisant with, treated it with apish ceremony. The same idea, and partly the same phrase itself, occurs in Ulpian Fulwe’s Arte of Flatterie, 1579: ‘Flatterie hath taken such habit in man’s affections, that it is in most men altera natura: ye, the very sucking babes hath a kind of adulation towards their nurses for the dugge.’—Preface to the Reader. REED: ‘Comply’ is right. So in Fuller’s Historie of the Holy Warre, p. 80: ‘Some weeks were spent in complying, entertainments, and visiting holy places.’ In Reed’s Var. 1803 and 1813 he added the remark: ‘To comply was, however, by no means an unusual term in Shakespeare’s time.’ ‘This,’ says CALDECOTT, ‘was said [by Reed] in answer to Malone’s assertion in the Pseudo-Rowleian controversy, ‘that the verb, to comply, was unknown for half a century after Elizabeth’s reign.’ Reed having, however, omitted to produce any instance, and none having been given from any other quarter, we shall instance Lord Burleigh, who died 1598; and who, in his Letter of Advice to his son, says: “Be sure to keep some great man . . . . Compliment him often with many, but small, gifts, and of little charge.” So “free from inhumane austeritie on the one side and voyde of fond and idle complementing indulgence on the other.”—Chadwith’s Funeral Sermon, 1613.’ [See II, ii, 354; both there and here SINGER maintains his interpretation of ‘embrace.’]

179. bevy] TOLLET: He has just called Osr. a lapwing, hence the propriety of ‘bevy.’ WHITE: It is a more characteristic classification of Osr. than breed.

181. yesty] Clarendon: Histy of Q, Q may have been a mistake for kasty.

183. fond and winnowed] Warburton: 'Fond' should undoubtedly be fann'd, alluding to corn separated by the fan from chaff. The opinions here spoken of may mean the opinions of great men and courtiers, men separated by their quality from the vulgar, as corn is separated from the chaff. This 'yesty collection' insinuates itself into people of the highest Quality, as yeast into the finest flour. Johnson: 'If Q preserved any traces of the original, Sh. wrote "sane and renowned," which is better than "fann'd and winnowed."' The meaning is: these men have got the cant of the day, a superficial readiness of slight and cursory conversation, a kind of frothy collection of fashionable prattle which yet carries them through the most select and approving judgments. This airy field of talk sometimes imposes upon wise men. Who has not seen this observation verified?' Jennens follows Q, but modifies it in his text to 'profane and tres-renowned,' 'which is the French method of forming superlatives, i.e. the most renowned;' and paraphrases: such a superficial collection of knowledge as carries them through the most common (profane) and even the most renowned opinions, i.e. opinions, or branches of learning, which bring renown to the learned in them. Steevens: 'Fond,' i.e. foolish, is evidently opposed to 'winnowed,' i.e. sifted, examined. Their conversation was yet sufficient enough to make them passable not only with the weak, but with those of sounder judgement. The same opposition in terms is in the readings of the Qs: profane and vulgar are opposed to trennowed or thrice renowned. Tollet: Fanned and 'winnowed' occur together in Markham's Husbandry, pp. 18, 76, 77. So also 'fan and wind' in Tre. & Cres. v, iii, 41. Caldecott interpreted the phrase: 'All judgements, not the simplest only, but the most sifted and wisest.' Dyce (Remarks, &c., p. 221) pronounces Warburton's emendation 'admirable,' and one which 'evidently restores the genuine reading.' White (Sh. Scholar, p. 422) advocates 'fond and winnowed,' and interprets: 'They go through and through (i.e. they stop at no absurdity in) the most fond (i.e. affected or foolish) and winnowed (i.e. elaborately sought out) opinions.' But White, having found that 'fan' and 'winnow' are 'often coupled in the writings of Shakespeare's day,' and 'that "fond" (foolish) sorts ill with "winnowed" in its figurative sense,' in his subsequent edition agreed with Warburton and Dyce that 'fond' of the Ff is a misprint for fond, and added, 'of the meaning of the passage in this form I am not quite sure, though it is probably to be found in Dr Johnson's paraphrase.' Clarke: 'Probably "fond" is here used to express "fondly cherished," "dearly esteemed," while "winnowed" means "choice," "select." 'Fond' is thus used in I, v, 99.' B. Nicholson (N. & Qu., 16 Jan. 1864): Ham. of course means that Osr. and his compeers have not that inward wit necessary to parley true euphuism, but only the outward trick of the language, which while it passed with folks of like mind, would not stand the trial of better judgement. . . . If for ' winnowed' or 'trennowed,' we read 'vinewed or 'vinnewed—and blue vinney is Dorsetshire, and 'vinwedist' is spelt in the Ff of Tro. & Cret. 'whinidist,' —we have a chance that restores the sense,—a word not incongruous with, but suggested by, the metaphorical yesty collection, and a repetition of that Shakespearian expression, a 'mouldy wit.' . . . The 'yesty collection' is the frothiness of sour and stale beer, which passes with those of corrupted and vitiated taste; but when tried and blown upon by the more sober judgement flies off, and does not remain like the true head of sound liquor or wit. Subsequently (N. & Qu., 31 Dec. 1864), Nicholson added that he had forgotten the variant of 'vinewed,' which is 'fenned or 'fennwod. 'The last was doubtless the form chosen by Sh. in this passage,' Bailey (ii, 17) changes this whole passage thus: 'only got the tune of the time, and out of the habit of encounter [got] a kind of yesty diction which . . . . the most profound and renouned opinions.' In support, he adds: 1. That the verb 'got' governs both the 'tune of the time' and 'a kind of yesty diction,' the latter of which the persons concerned got, 'out of the habit of encounter.' 2. That 'diction' has been used by Ham. just before in the phrase, 'to make true diction of him.' 3. That 'most profound and renouned' comes much nearer the old reading than 'most fond and winnowed.' Besides, most winnowed is not English. We should not say of one sack of wheat amongst several that it was the most winnowed, but that it was the best winnowed. Tschischwitz proposed and adopted in his text: 'profound and winnowed, on the ground that two opposite ideas, like 'fond' and 'winnowed,' cannot be connected by 'and' so long as 'most,' by qualifying both, combined them in one idea. 'People of Osric's class are like chaff that is to be found in a deep and well-sifted heap of wheat.' Huyson: 'Opinions conceitedly fine and winnowed clean of the dust of common sense; such opinions as are affected by lingual exquisites of all times. Clarendon inclines to Tschischwitz's reading: 'profound' and winnowed' as affording a proper contrast with 'yesty collection.' Moberly: 'A set of frothy expressions suited perpetually to express the absurdest and most over-refined notions.'

207. augury] CORNHILL MAGAZINE ('Presentiments,' October, 1866, p. 459): This passage is one of the simplest, as it is one of the strongest, proofs of Shakespeare's belief in presentiments. In all the instances he gives us, the moral to be drawn is that the warning is neglected and the fate comes. At first we might think that Hamlet's feeling was natural. He had detected the King's villainy, and he knew his own counterplot would not long be secret. But it is plain that he suspected nothing in the challenge to fence with Laer. He never once examined the foils, or measured them, but picked up the first that came to hand, and took the length on trust. Just before, when Hor. warned him, he had said, 'The interim is mine;' and he clearly looked forward to having things his own way till the next news from England. [See Rom. & Jul. V, i, 1.]

208-211. If... betimes?] TSCHICHTSCHWITZ (Sh. Forschungen, i, 62) calls attention to an 'exactly parallel' passage in the Dedication to Giordano Bruno's Candelaio. By this philosophy my soul is elevated and my capacity for thinking enlarged. But whatsoever may be the appointed hour of that evening which I am awaiting, when the change will take place, I, who am in the night, await the day, and those who are in the day await the night. Everything that exists is either at hand or at a distance, near or far, now or later, instantly or hereafter.'

them? Therefore, come what will, I am prepared.' JOHNSON: 'The reading of the Quarto was right, but in some other copy the harshness of the transposition was softened, and the passage stood thus: Since no man knows aught of what he leaves. For knows was printed in the later copies has by a slight blunder in such typographers. I do not think Warburton's interpretation of the passage the best that it will admit. The meaning may be this: Since no man knows aught of the state of life which he leaves, since he cannot judge what other years may produce, why should he be afraid of leaving life betimes? Why should he dread an early death, of which he cannot tell whether it is an exclusion of happiness or an interception of calamity? I despise the superstition of angry and omens, which has no ground in reason or piety; my comfort is, that I cannot fall but by the direction of Providence. Hamer's conjecture is not very reprehensible: Since no man can call any possession certain, what is it to leave? The Ff have received their best interpretation from Caldecott, viz.: 'Since no man has (i.e. has any secure hold, or can properly be denominated the possessor, of) any portion of that which he leaves, or must leave, behind him, of what moment is it that this leave-taking, or parting with a possession so frail, should be made thus early?' Collier truly remarks that no old copy is at all well printed in this scene; and Dyck pronounces the present passage suspicious. White thinks the Qq are manifestly wrong. Clarke prefers the Qq on what, I think, is the true ground, so finely paraphrased by Johnson: That it is more characteristic of Ham, to think little of leaving life, because he cannot solve its many mysteries, than because he cannot carry with him life's goods. Clarendon thinks that Johnson's is perhaps the true reading.

213. pardon] JOHNSON: I wish Ham. had made some other defence; it is unsuitable to the character of a brave or a good man to shelter himself in falsehood. Seymour (ii, 204) believes that the passage from 'This presence,' &c., line 215, down to 'enemy,' line 226, is an interpolation. The falsehood contained in it is too ignoble. Walker (Crit. iii, 274): Arrange: '—I 'have done you wrong; but pardon't, As you're a gentleman. This presence knows.' [That is, in two lines, the first ending 'pardon't.' Ed.]
This presence knows,
And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd
With sore distraction. What I have done,
That might your nature, honour, and exception
Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness.
Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet;
If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away,
And, when he's not himself, does wrong Laertes,
Then Hamlet does it not; Hamlet denies it.
Who does it then? His madness; if't be so,
Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd;
His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy.
Sir, in this audience,
Let my disclaiming from a purposed evil
Free me so far in your most generous thoughts,
That I have shot mine arrow o'er the house,
And hurt my brother.

Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most

To keep my name ungored. But till that time
I do receive your offer’d love like love,
And will not wrong it.

in Laertes.

Ham. This likes me well.—These foils have all a length?
Osr. Ay, my good lord. [They prepare to play.

247. wager 248. Very . . side] Heath (p. 550) pronounces this passage, as at present punctuated, stark nonsense, which is to be remedied by a comma after 'lord,' and a semicolon after 'laid;' That is: 'Your wager, my lord, is prudently laid; you have given odds to the weaker side.' And the King's reply is in proof: 'But since that time he is greatly improved, therefore we are allowed odds.' Johnson: The odds were on the side of Laer., who was to hit Ham. twelve times to nine. It was perhaps the author's slip. Jennens solved the difficulty, in noting that the odds here alluded to are those that were laid in the wager, viz. the greater value of the King's stake as compared with Laertes's, and not to the number of hits, which is what the King refers to in his reply. Ritson computes the value of the King's six Barbary horses in comparison with the rapiers, &c., as about twenty to one, and adds, 'these are the odds here meant.' Moberly: 'I understand that your grace has taken care that points shall be given me; but for all that, I fear that I shall be the weaker. No, replies the King, I have seen you both, and the points given will counterbalance his Paris improvement.'

250. better'd . . odds] Jennens: 'Since the wager he gains if he should win is better than what we shall gain if he loses, therefore we have odds, that is, we are not to make as many hits as Laer.' Caldecott: 'Better'd,' i.e. stands higher in estimation. Delius (and Moberly in the preceding note) refer 'better'd' to Laertes's proficiency acquired in Paris. Keightley (Expositor, p. 298): If he (i.e. Laer.) was bettered, in the ordinary sense of the word, how could the odds lie against him? You're would give better sense than 'he's;' but it does not satisfy me. A line has evidently been lost, and the latter part may be addressed to the Queen. The lost line may have been something like this: 'Tis true he did neglect his

Also a faire, great, orient pearle, called an union.’ And Bullokar, Eng. Expositor, 1621, to the same effect. STEEVENS: See Holland’s trans. of Pliny, p. 255: ‘. . . our dainties and delicacies here at Rome, haue deuisd this name for them, and call them Uniones; as a man would say, Singular, and by themselves alone.’ It may be observed that pearls were supposed to possess an exhilarating quality. Thus, Rondelet, lib. i, de Testac. c. xv: ‘Uniones quæ à conchis, &c., valde cordiales sunt.’ CLARENDON: Mr King (Nat. Hist. of Precious Stones, &c., p. 267) says: ‘As no two pearls were ever found exactly alike, this circumstance gave origin to the name “unio” (unique). But in Low Latin “Margarita(um),” and “perla” became a generic name, “unio” being restricted to the fine spherical specimens.’

274. fat] Roberts, the player, in his Answer to Pope, 1729, stated that John Lowin acted Henry VIII and Hamlet; it is also known on the authority of Wright, in his Historia Histrionica, 1699, that Lowin acted Falstaff. Hence Steevens conjectured that, if the man who was corpulent enough to act Falstaff and Henry VIII should also appear as Hamlet, this observation was put by Sh. into the mouth of her majesty to apologize for the man of such elegance of person as an audience might expect to meet with in the representative of the youthful Prince of Denmark, whom Oph. speaks of as the "glass of fashion and the mould of form." MALONE: Wright and Downes, the prompter, concur in saying that Taylor was the performer of Hamlet, Roberts alone has asserted (and apparently without authority) that Lowin acted this part. But, in truth, I am convinced it was neither Taylor nor Lowin, but probably Burbage. Taylor apparently was not of the company till late, perhaps after 1615, and Lowin not till after 1603. Collier, in his Memoirs of the Principal Actors in the Plays of Sh., Sh. Soc. Publications, 1846, p. 51, shows conclusively that Burbage was the original Hamlet, and cites in proof the Elegy upon him, copied from a MS in the possession of Heber, containing an enumeration of the various parts in which Burbage was distinguished. Shakespeare's words are there used in reference to the fatness of the actor: "No more young Hamlet, though but scant of breath, shall cry "Revenge!" for his dear father's death." STAUNTON: Does the Queen refer to Ham. or Lar.? CLARKE: We believe that this refers not to Burbage, but to Ham. himself, who, as a sedentary student, a man of contemplative habits, one given rather to reflection than to action, might naturally be supposed to be of somewhat plethoric constitution. This accords well with his not daring to 'drink' while he is heated with the fencing bout; with his being of a 'complexion that makes him feel the weather 'sultry and hot'; with his custom of walking 'four hours together in the lobby'; with his having a special 'breathing time of the day'; and with his telling Hor. that he has 'been in continual practice' of fencing,—as though he took set exercise for the purpose of counteracting his constitutional tendency to that full habit of body which is apt to be the result of sedentary occupation and a too sedulous addiction to scholarly pursuits. W. A. 1862, page 202) states that, in 1864, he received a letter from Dr Ingleby, communicating a 'fine reading' proposed by 'Mr H. WYETH, of Winchester,' of faint for 'fat.' Plehwe (Hamlet, Prima von Dänemark, Hamburg, 1862, p. 214) refers to IV, vii, 158, and conjectures that the same word is here used: hot.

King.

Queen.

I will, my lord; I pray you, pardon me.

King. [Aside] It is the poisoned cup! it is too late!

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think't.

Laer. [Aside] And yet 'tis almost 'gainst my conscience.

283. conscience] Clarke: This symptom of relenting is not only a redeeming touch in the character of Laer. (and Sh., in his large tolerance and true knowledge of human nature, is fond of giving these redeeming touches even to his worst characters), but it forms a judiciously interposed link between the young man's previous determination to take the Prince's life treacherously, and his subsequent revealment of the treachery. From the deliberate malice of becoming the agent in such a plot, to the remorseful candor which confesses it, would have been too violent and too abrupt a moral change, had not the dramatist, with his usual skill, introduced this connecting point of half compunction.

286. wanton] Ritson: You trifle with me as if you were playing with a child.

Hudson: This is a quiet but very significant stroke of delineation. Laer. is not playing his best, and it is the conscience of what is at the point of his foil that keeps him from doing so; and the effects are perceptible to Ham., though he dreams not of the reason.

289. Stage-direction] SEYMOUR (ii, 204): It is common in the exercise of the sword for one combatant to disarm the other by throwing, with a quick and strong parry, the foil out of his hand; and Ham., having done this, might, agreeably to the urbanity of his nature, have presented his own foil to Laer., while he stopped to take up that of his adversary; and Laer., who was only half a villain, could not have hesitated to accept the perilous accommodation, and, indeed, had not time allowed him to avoid it. M. C. (New Monthly Mag. vol. xiii, p. 301, March, 1820): After Ham. is hurt in the next round Laer. should master his foil. Ham.
thus on the point of being disarmed, should by a vigorous effort seize the sword of Laer. Thus both parties would hold both weapons, and in separating each would retain that of which he had a better hold. By these means an exchange might easily take place. It is quite unnecessary that the parties should be ignorant of the circumstance. Ham. is not aware of its importance; but Laer. sees his imminent peril. Horror, remorse, and shame would make him parry imperfectly in the next round, wherein he receives his mortal wound. TIECK (Ludwig Tieck von Rud.
Köpke, Leipzig, 1855, ii, 220, cited by Elze) thus explains the exchange of rapiers:
At the back of the stage there is a table, on which lie the rapiers. The combatants take them up, fight a round, and replace them on the table, and conversation occupies the pause between the rounds. The King then lets Osric, or some other courier, change the rapiers unobserved, so that the poisoned one falls to Ham. and is taken up by him. For the King, whose character is always consistent, cannot permit Laer. to survive, who had just headed a rebellion, and was moreover privy to the whole plot against Ham. [See TIECK, Appendix, Vol. II.] ELZE thinks that in scuffling the rapiers are dropped, and are accidentally changed in picking them up, and that Laer. is too excited and Ham. too unsuspicious to notice the change. HRUSI attaches but little importance to the whole matter,—actors have more adroitness in managing such things than scholars at their desks, anyhow; the spectators need not see so very exactly that there has been an actual exchange. It is enough that the combatants become violently incensed, and that a spectator at a distance could not rightly say what was done in the scuffle. The issue makes it clear enough. [No aid, that I can find, is to be obtained from Vincentio Saviolo his Practise, 1595. In sig. H 3, directions are given for 'fastening your left hand on the hilts of your enemies sword.'—ED.] The following stage-directions are given in Tom Taylor's Acting Edition of Hamlet, 1873: '[Laertes wounds Hamlet; who in return disarms him, and catches his foil.]

After 'Ham. Nay, come again,' line him of, and wounds him with it.]

In A Study of Hamlet, by E. B. H. (London, 1875), the passage is thus given:—'[Laertes wounds Hamlet, who in return disarms him—Laertes then, to prevent himself being struck by Hamlet, rushes on him and clutches his foil—they struggle.] King. Part them! they are incens'd. [Hamlet

'envenom'd too!' &c. [Staunton's text, followed by Delius, thus reads: 'The point—

311. but hurt] Rohrbach (p. 37): Claudius's last words are characteristic; he says that he is merely wounded, although he knows that the sword which has stabbed him is poisoned. Thus tenacious is he of that which he has, this present life, until Ham. forces down his throat the poisoned drink. To his latest breath he is the type of strength and quick decision. Even his death, his last step, is quick and decided, as had always been his style of action.
Drink off this potion! Is thy union here? Follow my mother!

_Laer._ He is justly served; It is a poison temper'd by himself.— Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet; Mine and my father's death come not upon thee, Nor thine on me!

Malone: So in Silvester's Du Bartas:—'And Death, dard serjant of th' eternall Judge, Comes very late to his sole-seated Lodge.'—The Third Day of the first Week, p. 30, ed. 1633. Hunter (ii, 266): Silvester is the earlier writer, but Shakespeare's substitution of 'fell' for 'dread' shows a master hand.

335. cause aright] Delius (ed. i): Perhaps the text of the Ff should read 'cause's right.' [Not repeated in ed. ii.]

336. Roman] Franz Horn (ii, 91): This allusion is characteristic; in the very first scene Hor. described vividly the omens that took place 'ere the mightiest Julius fell.'

337. live behind] Staunton: Compare, 'No glory lives behind the back of such.—Much Ado, III, i, 110. that in the Folio there is a slight misprint. The possible objection that Ham., and not the things unknown, would leave the name, is of a prosaic sort that need not be regarded. Stratmann: It can hardly be denied that the reading of the Qq is more natural than that of the Ff.

340. o'er-crows] Jennens: As a victorious cock crows over his defeated antagonist. Stevens: This expression is also found in Chapman's Odyssey, lib. xxi:—

'and told his foe It was not fair, nor equal, t' overcrow The poorest guest.' Malone: Again, in the epistle prefixed to Nash's Apologie of Pierce Pennilisses, 1593:

'About two yeeres since a certayne demi-divine took upon him to set his foote on mine, and overcrowe me with comparative terms.' Clarendon: Johnson quotes from Spenser's View of the Present State of Ireland (Globe ed., p. 660): 'A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dounghill beginneth nove to over-crowe soe high mountanes, and make himselfe greate protectour of all outlawes and rebels that will repaye vnto him.' Tschirschwitz adopts over-awes in his text, as 'the only word which affords a suitable sense.'

344. occurrents] Stevens: Incidents, occurrences. Compare: 'As our occur-rents happen in degree.'—Drayton's Barons' Wars, bk i, canto xii. Clarendon: Compare Holland's Pliny, xxv, 2: 'This occurrent fell out in Lacetania, the nearest part unto vs of Spain.'

345. solicited] WARBURTON: That is, brought on the event. HEATH (p. 551): That is, incited me to the act of vengeance I have just performed. MASON: The sentence is left imperfect. WALKER (Crit. iii, 274): 'Solicit,' like many other words derived from the Latin, as religion for worship or service, &c.,—had not yet lost its strict Latin meaning. LETTSON (foot-note to foregoing): The original significance of the Latin word seems to have been to move, and the various meanings attached to it by lexicographers are but modifications of this primary one. Ham. seems to have been thinking of the events that had 'solicited' or moved him to recommend Fort. as successor to the throne. CLarendon: Compare Rich. II: I, ii, 2. [See Mach. I, iii, 130.]

345. The rest is silence] CLARENDON: If Hamlet's speech is interrupted by his death, it would be more natural that these words should be spoken by Hor. MOBERLY: To Ham. silence would come as the most welcome and most gracious of friends, as relief to the action-wearied soul, freedom from conflicting motives, leisure for searching out all problems, release from the toil of finding words for thought; as the one sole language of immortality, the only true utterance of the infinite.

345. White: The O, o, o, o, of the Folio is the addition, doubtless, of some actor.

346. cracks] Elsewhere used by Sh. where we should now use break. See Per. III, ii, 78; Cor. V, iii, 9.

347. rest] COLLIER (ed. ii): The remainder of the trag-dy is stuck through with a pen in the (MS) and the word Finis subjoined, to show that it was there at an end. The concluding lines also are thus converted into a couplet: 'Now cracks a noble heart; good night, be blest, And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest.' Another 'tag' is added afterwards, of a very poor and inanimate character, most unlike the language of Sh. which, it seems, the performer of the part of Hor. was also to deliver when the piece was abbreviated; it is as follows:—While I remain behind to tell a tale, That shall hereafter turn the hearers pale.' Although the conclusion is hastened in this way, the old annotator has continued his corrections to the end of the tragedy, as it has come down to us; but from what source he derived

351. cries on] The game killed. See Mach. IV, iii, 206.

351. cries on] Johnson: To exclaim against. I suppose when unfair sportsmen destroyed more quarry or game than was reasonable the censure was to cry Havock. Caldecott: See Oth. V, i, 48. White: 'This heap of dead proclaims an indiscriminate slaughter.' Clarendon: 'This pile of corpses urges to merciless slaughter, where no quarter is given.' In the Statutes of Wars, &c., by King Henry VIII (1513), quoted in Todd's ed. of Johnson's Dict., it is enacted, 'That noo man be so hardy to crye havoke, upon payne of hym that is so founde beginner, to dye therefore; and the remenaunt to be empriyoned, and theire bodyes punyshed at the kynges will.' See also the Ordinances of War of Richard II and Henry V, published in the Black Book of the Admiralty (ed. Twiss), i, 455, 462. The etymology of the word is purely conjectural. Some derive it from the Welsh hafog, destruction; others from the A. S. hafer, a hawk; others from the French hai, vous! a cry to hounds.

352. feast] Caldecott: This allusion has, no doubt, some connection with the usage of all the northern nations, their Ambarvalia or Arval suppers referred to by Ham. I, ii, 180. Compare 'Death feasts.'—King John, II, i, 354.

352. toward] See I, i, 77.

352. eternal] Walker (Crit. i, 62) gives two other instances besides this and 1, v, 21 (which see), where 'eternal' seems to be used for 'infernall': Jul. Cas. I, ii, 160; Oth. IV, ii, 130. 'This seems to be still in use among the common people. I need scarcely notice the Yankee 'tarnal'.

afterwards, that we make the change, not only without reluctance, but with thankfulness for the improvement upon the usual tame and figurative line. 'Same' for without bringing guilt on himself by his death; no fear that his sleep should have bad dreams in it now. Those whom he loved, his mother, Laer., Oph., have all died guiltless or forgiven. Late, and under the strong compulsion of approaching death, he has done, and well done, the inevitable task from which his gentle nature shrank. Why, then, any farther thought, in the awful presence of death, of crimes, conspiracies, vengeance? Think that he has been slain in battle, like his Sea-King forefathers; and let the booming cannon be his mourners.
